Local trade has been far from brisk with the majority and funeral work has constituted the major part of it, hence white flowers have had rather the best of it in demand.

The shortage of roses is generally ascribed to the effects of the long stretch of unfavorable weather last fall when the foundation was being laid for the present season's work, the plants having never fully recovered. Those growers who got their plants through this trying period in fair shape are the ones who are now having the best cut.

Various Items.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club to be held tomorrow (Friday) evening at room 417, 40 Randolph St., the use of iron in greenhouse construction will be thoroughly discussed. The program includes a paper by W. N. Rudd covering the question in a general way and one by Geo. M. Garland on the advantages of the iron gutter and iron post construction. It will undoubtedly be a very interesting and instructive meeting.

The bowlers went to Milwaukee Saturday evening and report that they were gorgeously entertained during their brief stay. A full report of the affair appears in our Milwaukee news letter in this issue.

Geo. H. Underhill.

Mr. Peter Reinberg is very favorably impressed with the new pink carnation, Mrs. Leopold Ine, and will next season plant eight or more houses of it. It is a sport from Tidal Wave and is similar to Evanston except in color, which is almost identical with that of Crane. Its great advantage is that it carries a big Christmas crop, a time when Crane has generally been inclined to stand still. It originated with Mr. Leopold Ine at the Bohemian National Cemetery. Mr.

Reinberg is also much pleased with Guardian Angel and will plant a large lot of it the coming season.

Robert J. Purvis, a pioneer florist of this city, died at his home in Edgewater, Jan. 21, aged 88 years. The funeral was held Jan. 24 and interment was at Rose Hill.

Mrs. Chas. Eickholt of Galveston, Tex., returned home last Saturday after having visited Indianapolis, Richmond, and Lafayette, Ind., as well as points nearer Chicago. She expressed great appreciation of the many courtesies shown her by the craft everywhere and leaves for home with the kindest remembrances of her northern friends.

The name of Mr. O. L. Baird, Dixon, Ill., was accidentally omitted from the list of those present at the carnation meeting and on the excursion to Joliet.

John Blanek, the 43d St. florist, had his stock of plants frozen recently as the result of an accident to his heating apparatus. This precipitated pending financial difficulties and a receiver is in charge.

H. C. Frese has given up his retail store at 72 State St. As his health is very poor his retirement from business will probably be permanent.

C. F. Klunder has left Mangel and has opened a store on his own account at 2206 Michigan avenue.

E. H. Hunt has made numerous changes in his establishment, enlarging the office space and adjusting the various departments to the increased room available through the absorption of the space formerly occupied by A. G. Prince & Co.

Mr. Judson Kramer, Cedar Rapids, Ia., was a visitor last Tuesday.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

There is no change in trade conditions since last week. Just a fair demand and the general supply short enough to keep prices well up, especially upon small roses. Bulb goods and violets are perhaps not quite so plentiful as last week and are bringing a trifle more. Scarcity of green material is not quite so marked.

Various Items.

Geo. A. Sutherland is breaking up housekeeping at the old stand on Bromfield street and moving into his new quarters at 34 Hawley street, to which address all telegrams, telephone, mail and express orders should be sent after Feb. 11.

A second telephone has been installed at the Park street market as a sort of safety valve to prevent so much profanity in the line of men waiting to use the old one, as well as to better accommodate those at a distance who try to call up salesmen in the room during the busy hours. Better service will probably now be obtained, especially in the morning, by using the new number "Haymarket 764." Persons using a 'phone at the market, however, will confer a favor by using the old one, the new number being of limited service.

J. W. Howard has contracted to supply the Boston & Maine R. R. with fifty thousand bedding plants about June 1. The list includes achyranthes, alternantheras, cannas, caladiums, coleus, feverfews, geraniums, lobelias, zinnias and salvias. This is one of the largest orders ever placed in this vicinity, and the company can hardly fail to receive satisfaction in goods supplied by this grower, especially at so late a date.

F. W. Fletcher has sent in a hundred cuts of Roman hyacinths with the claim that they are the first ever offered for sale from strictly American grown bulbs. Naturally the buyers do not care whether they are grown under the spreading wings of the bird of freedom, or in Amsterdam, Rotterdam or any other place, but the fact is they are A1 specimens and worthy of a scream from the hooked beak of the would-be conqueror of Aguinaldo.

Horticultural Hall was crowded on Saturday, Jan. 26, to hear Benjamin P. Ware's description of Kew Gardens and the grounds of Hampton Court. His talk was rich in simplicity and clearness, and the huge pictures thrown upon the screen were ample proof that while we may be getting ahead of them in the matter of manufactures and mining, the aggressive Britons need no horticultural assistance.

If the expression "Bright on" in last week's communication be read "Brighton" perhaps the meaning will be made clearer. J. S. Manter.

PHILADELPHIA.

Trade Conditions.

Business continued active during the past week. The prospects are that the remaining three weeks and two days of the season (it will be but two weeks and two days when these notes appear) will be very active indeed. There are several large balls, including the second Assembly, numberless teas and days at home, a few weddings, St. Valentine's and many small parties, dinners and so on all to be crowded into this short time before Lent.

Prices are holding well and on good stock they will probably continue to hold at least until February 20.

Plant Sales at Christmas.

Four of the leading wholesale plant growers have given kindly response to the Review's request for information regarding the Christmas plant business. These answers follow:

I cannot say that I noticed any material increase in the sales of palms that I considered were purchased for Christmas stock. Many buyers, to save heavy express charges, lay in the bulk of their stock, including that for Christmas, early, often during October or November, when shipments can be made by freight.

I think the season of 1900 was an exception to this custom. October and November being so very mild the sales of such stock were affected to a considerable degree, many buyers holding back their orders until there should be more demand. My sales for October and November were behind what I expected, yet for December were nearly 50 per cent in excess of the average for the same month of the five preceding years. I find my sales for the four months previous to Jan. 1 about 10 per cent ahead of the average of five years preceding for the same period. This I consider satisfactory.

Kentias, Latania Borbonica and Areca lutescens from 6-inch to 8-inch pots were the sizes most generally asked for. The demand for plants larger than are usually grown in 10-inch pots was less I think than usual. Well grown, shapely Latanias held a good place in the list of favorites. Livistona rotundifolia, Pandanus Veitchii and Dracaena terminalis all sold readily. Cocos Weddeliana and small Kentia Belmoreana for fern dishes were used in the usual quantity. I think palms and foliage plants held their place, notwithstanding the great number of flowering plants sold for Christmas.

Chas. D. Ball.

I find that the palms that I grow are not wanted for the holidays. It seems that plants of bright colored foliage or flowers are what are needed at that season.

Joseph Heacock.

I sold out clean all good pot plants of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and its delicate pink sport (Light Pink Lorraine) for Christmas, and could have sold many more, as the demand with us was much greater than last year, and the prices were better for the larger sizes. As an indication: For Christmas, 1899, $3.00 per plant in 6-inch pots was the highest price paid; for last Christmas (1900), for the same sized pot, $4.00 was more readily secured than was the $3.00 paid the year before.

Edwin Lonsdale.

My Dear Friend: I never bother my head about writing articles for publication. My head is too small, therefore it contains but little and that little I wish to spend for my selfish enjoyment.

Wm. K. Harris.

[Fie, Deacon, Deacon! This won't do. I'll ne'er believe such yarns of you. Phil.]

It will be seen that Messrs. Ball and Heacock virtually agree that a wholesale grower cannot estimate the Christmas demand for foliage plants with any degree of accuracy, as the retailers purchase stock earlier, selling it right along from the time cold weather sets in until the holidays.

With regard to blooming plants there is no question that the demand has greatly increased. It is learned from several sources that not only Begonia Gloire de Lorraine but also cyclamens, poinsettias, and several other varieties of flowering plants, were in short supply. The holiday market will undoubtedly take more of this class of plants in the future, but I do not think the weather conditions in our latitude will ever permit of the plant business rivaling the cut flower business in midwinter.

Ladies' Night.

Ladies' night at the club was celebrated last Wednesday night with a reception, games and light refreshments. I was not fortunate enough to be present on the occasion, but those who were there seem to have enjoyed themselves very much. Phil.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business remains about the same as reported last week with perhaps rather more than the usual amount of funeral work. The weather has been delightful and flowers of all kinds have become more plentiful. There is a fair demand for roses when they are of first quality. The West End florists report that last week dinners, weddings, receptions and other entertainments made a call for large quantities of choice cut flowers. The downtown florists have had plenty of funeral work and a good counter trade.

Very few fakirs are now seen on the streets as flowers are too expensive for them to sell on the corners.

The rose market has been very good. The best Beauties sold from 25 to 50 cents each and are a little scarce at that. Brides and Maids have been in good demand at from $5 to $8; Perles and Wootons, $2 to $4; Meteors and Golden Gates, $4 to $8. Perles are rather scarce.

Carnations are grand in quality and the demand great. Daybreak, Scott, White Cloud and Crane are looked for the most. Fancy stock brings $2.50 to $3, but $2 is about the average price. The Chicago Carnation Co.'s stock has a great call; so has Dumford's and Klockenkemper's stock.

The bulb stock shortened up somewhat last week. Both Romans and paper whites sell at $2 and $3; freesias, $1.50; valley, $2 to $4; daffodils, $4. Callas have a good call at 15 cents each.

Violets are in fine demand with plenty of them on hand at 40 cents per 100 and 30 cents in 1,000 lots for the best. Californias, small single and double, are out of the market.

Various Items.

Our visitor this week is our old friend, A. L. Vaughan, representing Hagemann & Meyer, New York. Lloyd reports that the bulb trade is greater than ever.

Ellison & Tesson have closed their uptown store but will continue the one at 625 Olive street. Mr. Wm. Ellison will soon leave for California for his health.

John Quinn, the North Grand avenue florist, reports good trade during the present month.

The club meeting which will be held Thursday afternoon, February 14, at 3 o'clock should be well attended as the annual rose show will be held. The prizes of $5, $3 and $2 for the best vase of 50 roses is for the local growers only. Entries are filling up fast and a great show is expected. The show committee will make its final report and the new one will be appointed for this year's show. Everybody is invited, regardless of membership. President Guy and Secretary Schray expect the largest attendance in the history of the club.

Bowling.

The bowling club had a good time Monday night, nine members being present. A. L. Vaughan was a visitor and rolled two good games. The following scores were made:

A FUMIGATOR.

I send you a drawing of a tobacco fumigator that I designed myself and which I find superior to anything else of the sort I have ever tried.

In using it I first break or cut up corncobs in small pieces and soak them in coal oil for future use. I put one of these pieces in the bottom of the fumigator, light it and set a bunch of stems on the blaze. Then I roll up a bunch of stems that have been made quite damp, about 3 inches in diameter and 12 to 20 inches long, using ties of common wrapping thread 3 or 4 inches apart, and set one end of this on the fire, the roll being held upright by the wire frame. As it burns away the ties will be loosened one by one, and if the stems are quite damp and rolled tight it will last one or two hours. If not so damp, of course it will burn out sooner.

There is no danger of the stems blaz

BALTIMORE.

Various Items.

We have had here the first snow of the winter, about six inches in the suburbs, and not melted yet, but going down slowly to replenish the springs below, which is greatly needed, so severe a winter drought as that prevailing being very rare in this locality.

For the week ending with this writing (Jan. 28) trade has been very good, though the scarcity of flowers is remarkable. The crops of nearly all growers appear to be off at once, and the stores find some difficulty in securing their daily supplies, while the exchange has been at times completely bare. Prices, consequently, both of carnations and roses, are advancing. Some good mignonette is coming in, and the supply of violets is enlarging. Of greens, smilax is overabundant, but asparagus is scarce. Sprengeri does not take the place here of plumosus and can only be substituted for it when the latter is not readily had. Yet for masses and heavy work it is very effective.

The Carnation Meeting.

The interest in the carnation meeting and show naturally increases. For the exhibition, which, of course, will be a free one, 10,000 tickets have been printed, and these will be distributed through the agency of the florists of the city. This serves the double end of making them responsible for the character of the attendance, and, as there is no other way in which admission may be secured, their customers will feel a certain sense of appreciation of the favor shown in their receipt.

In the hall the exhibits will be placed on low benches, so that the flowers will be seen from above, and thus to more advantage than when the stages are high.

The committee on general arrangements and the banquet held a meeting this evening. It is expected that the mayor of the city and the president of the park commission will both be present and respond to suitable toasts. As to the feast itself, of course the bivalves, the Malaclemmys palustris, and the ducks, which have made this region famous as a gastronomic center, will under the inspiring direction of Mr. Seidewitz, be marshaled in in the most approved shapes.

Add to the list of those erecting new greenhouses, Robert L. Graham, who is about starting two, each 20x100 feet, for roses, at his place at Waverly. And yet only one brief year ago he put it it on public record that he would never, never build another!

The calla continues to succumb to disease and many growers find themselves entirely denuded of stock. RIX.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Business continues very good with some and fairly good with the great majority. It has been and promises to continue to be a prosperous season for the flower and plant trade. Some kinds of important stock has been exceptionally scarce as compared with other years, particularly so with good roses. The weather, of course, is always a most powerful element in the business, and it is only natural to heap the blame upon it.

It has been a very mild winter in New York; so far very little snow has fallen and bright frosty days have been few as compared to the dark and murky ones. Rose growers have had considerable trouble in dividing their scant output into the innumerable grades one hears quoted on the market, and exceptionally high prices have been a consequent outgrowth of insufficient supply.

Following are the prices per 100 that prevail in this market at present, the grades being special, fancy, extra, No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3: Beauties, 75, 60, 50, 20, 10; Brides and Maids, 30, 20, 15, 10, 5; Meteor, 20, 15, 12, 6, 3; Liberty, 50, 30, 20, 15, 8; Golden Gate, 20, 15, 8, 3; Brunners, 75, 50; Cusins and Morgans (only extra and No. 1 and 2 offered), 15, 8, 3; Cattleyas, 50; violets, 50 to 1.50; valley, 2 to 3; smilax, 15 to 20; carnations, ordinary, 1.50; fancy, 4 to 6; asparagus, 50.

Spring flowers, especially of the bulbous line, are becoming very plentiful, and of course it is an easy matter to make a fairly good show of one thing or another. And then a greater quantity of flowering plants, the forerunners of Easter, are appearing and this with other combinations, will, it is thought, lower the market values considerably within the next two weeks.

Very many of the florists have been suffering from grip, and many among the wholesalers have been laid up by the usual spring epidemic of poisoned fingers from the thorns of certain roses.

The second and third weeks of February promise to be lively ones floriculturally speaking. The Florists' Club will have a "Carnation Night" at their meeting on February 11. Any one having new carnations to show will please note this. John H. Taylor, of Bayside, L. I., will speak at the above meeting on his experiences with "Carnations disseminated in 1900." This will surely be a great night at the club.

The New York Gardeners' Society will hold a carnation show on Saturday evening, Feb. 9, at 47 West Forty-second St. Prizes will be offered for new carnations of every color, and the products of the leading private gardeners will be shown at this meeting. Commercial growers wishing to send their novelties will find this a good opportunity to show them to advantage.

The American Institute will hold a flower, fruit and vegetable show on February 13 and 14, at the Berkeley Lyceum, 19 West Forty-fourth St.

The New Jersey Floricultural Society will have a flower show at their annual dinner, which will take place at Lindley hall, Orange, N. J., February 6. All these affairs promise an immense amount of good to those who can attend.

SEEDS.

Newell Mix will engage in the seed business at Carthage, Mo.

H. T. Lape, Roseville, Ill., has fitted up one of his warerooms for the seed business.

Arthur King has entered the employ of M. Perkins, seed merchant, Winnipeg, Man., as traveling solicitor.

C. W. Scott, of Edgerton, Kan., has discontinued handling grain and will continue the seed business only.

Exports of clover seed from New York for the week ending Jan. 19 were 1,752 bags; compared with 1,200 bags a year ago

The arbitration committee of the Chicago Board of Trade on grass and field seeds, for the ensuing year, is composed of Thomas M. Hunter, Alex Rodgers, C. A. Heath, Albert Seckel and F. E. Winans.

Seed distribution by the government on a more rational plan has been devised by Frederick V. Coville, botanist of the Department of Agriculture, with a view to carrying out the original intention of the department for the testing of new and rare seeds.

Timothy seed amounting to 10,049,000 pounds was exported during the eleven months prior to Dec. 1, as reported by O. P. Austin, chief of the bureau of statistics; compared with 13,606,000 and 11,536,000 pounds during the corresponding periods of 1899 and 1898.

Exports of other than clover and timothy grass seeds during the eleven months prior to Dec. 1, as reported by O. P. Austin, chief of the bureau of statistics, were valued at $134,000; compared with $137,000 and $149,000 during the corresponding periods of 1899 and 1898.

Clover seed amounting to 20,800,000 pounds was exported during the eleven months ending with Nov. 30; compared with 24,121,000 pounds and 22,911,000 pounds during the corresponding periods of 1899 and 1898, as reported by O. P. Austin, chief of the bureau of statistics.

Chicago shipped during the week ending Jan. 19, 965,000 pounds of timothy seed, 400,000 pounds of clover seed, 6,000 bushels of flaxseed, and 156,000 pounds of other seed; compared with 1,166,000 pounds of timothy seed, 437,000 pounds of clover seed, 43,000 bushels of flaxseed, and 247,000 pounds of other seed, during the corresponding week a year ago.

Chicago received during the week ending Jan. 19, 351,000 pounds of timothy seed, 404,000 pounds of clover seed, 58,620 bushels of flaxseed, and 317,000 pounds of other seed; compared with 1,250,000 pounds of timothy seed, 121,000 pounds of clover seed, 33,050 bushels of flaxseed, and 98,000 pounds of other seed during the corresponding week of 1900.—Grain Dealers' Journal, Chicago.

CLOVER SEED.

Under date of Jan. 26, C. A. King & Co., Toledo, O., say:

Clover seed has improved a trifle the past week. Movement has been smaller, both in and out. Domestic buyers have hesitated a little, as they will not need the seed until later, when they hope to secure it cheaper. It will require larger receipts to help them out. Bulls have realized on a little, but the leading longs continue stubborn and own most of the stock here. They talk seven dollars for their old prime. They have plenty of money and are patient waiters.

Stock here now is a trifle less than the amount carried over from last season. No official report is made of it. Majority estimate it from 35,000 to 40,000 bags. Bulls predict that the February, March and April shipments from here will aggregate fully 50,000 bags. Last season they were 73,000 bags, against 67,000 the year before; 64,000 two years ago, and 50,000 three years ago. There will be very little disposition to carry seed over at present prices.

Receipts today 193 bags, making 1,073 for the week, against 2,095 year ago. Total this season to date 52,760 bags, against 109,800 year ago; 58,000 two years ago; 119,000 three years ago; 48,000 four years ago, and 108,000 in 1894.

Shipments today were fair. They were 672 bags, making 4,053 for the week, against 5,416 a year ago. Total this season to date, 58,000 bags, against 91,900 a year ago; 33,000 two years ago; 70,000 three years ago; 10,000 four years ago, and 93,500 in 1894.

Today the market was quiet and firm. Short day. Speculation quiet. Good demand low grades. No. 2 by sample $6.42½@6.57½. Rejected, $6.37½@6.40, with one good lot at $6.80. March $7.30@7.37½. 1899 prime, $6.70 bid. 1898 prime, $6.50 asked. Receipts Monday will be small, but will probably be fair next week.

St. Joseph, Mo.—The Farber Seed Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $3,000. It is divided into fifty shares of $100 each and one-half is paid up. The stockholders are Alice R. Farber, twenty-four shares; J. C. Farber, one share; William D. Graham, twelve and a half shares and Horace Stringfellow, twelve and a half shares The life of the incorporation is to be ten years.

A meeting of the executive committee of the American Seed Trade Association was held at the Hotel Walton, Philadelphia, Jan. 28, to arrange details for the meeting of the association to be held next June.

MILWAUKEE.

The Chicago Florists' Bowling Club paid us a visit last Saturday evening (Jan. 26). A delegation from the Milwaukee Club met the boys at the depot and it was unnecessary to see them in order to know they were on the train. When hardly off the train the "On the warpath" cry was given and the echo of it must have died away in Chicago. They presented a comical sight, being arrayed in a top gear of various colored crepe paper pot covers, and their march through the main thoroughfares on their way to the alleys made the natives think that the outbreak of the Snake Creeks had struck the town. Fortunately the policemen were off their beats or frightened away, for we reached the alleys safely.

The odds ran high during the first game, but the books were closed before the finish of the second. Some one said Hauswirth made 255 once, when he started off with a strike and we wanted him to do it over again, for we didn't see it. Coulson don't deliver his ball like a bonafide florist and did the best for Chicago. Degnan bowled his regular game. Stollery missed his brother and some easy spares. Asmus had it all fixed to beat Pollworth and was backed that way, but George was overworked. Benthey had on somebody's league shirt, but he wasn't in it. A good many of Kreitling's strikes are due to his wonderful control of the ball after it has left his hand. Balluff is a great success at a pinch when he isn't needed. Winterson looked pleasant, but it was hard on Eddie. Their own umpire showed no partiality. Don't think Rudd was intended for a mascot; he had an extra lucky stone along. The scores tell the rest—but let's forget it.

After a few words of condolence following the games the boys sat down to a banquet at Kurtz's Hall and it's needless to mention the entertaining qualities of the Chicago members. At the close of the banquet all donned wax noses of various shapes and hied themselves to the exposition where the annual Brewers' Masquerade ball was in progress. Balluff as a clothing man from the "Ghetto" district was unsurpassed.

We regret being unable to reproduce the appearance of the boys in print as it was a most comical sight. May they come often. C. C. P.

NEW GERANIUM LITTLE PINK

Or Double Pink "Mars," one of the best novelties of the Mars family. The first double of this class ever offered to the trade. It is a very dwarf, bushy, compact and extra free blooming variety, not exceeding 4 to 6 inches in height. Its trusses a pleasing shade of bright pink, upper petals white at the base. Unlike Mars or America in color, it has no trace of salmon shading. Its miniature trusses stand erect, 3 to 6 inches above the foliage. It is excellent for bedding, for the border, or as a pot plant. Too much praise cannot be given this grand little pink variety. Price $5.00 per doz., $35.00 per 100. Half-tone cuts will be furnished free of charge for catalogue. Correspondence solicited. Orders booked now for fall and winter delivery. Received certificate of merit at the New York Convention of the Society of American Florists.

PITTSBURG.

Various Notes.

Cut flowers are not very plentiful this dark, cloudy weather and roses especially are very scarce. Business seems to move right along though, as there have been a number of decorations and some funeral work.

Charles Koenig, of Bennett, is sending in some good tulips. Mr. Koenig is growing roses and carnations this year for the first time, and is growing them well.

C. Blind's Sons, of West View, have two houses of Brides and Maids that are good, but their Liberties are not a success this year. They grow some good carnations, Bradts especially well.

Carnations have been rather plentiful in pink; white seems to be scarce. We are still looking for a good all-around white. Some Norways have been received from Weber & Sons, Oakland, Md.

At Burki's, in Bellevue, they are now grafting roses and propagating Beauties. Mr. Burki has purchased a farm of 210 acres with a gas well on it, some eighteen miles from here, far enough away from the smoky city to be clean. He has formed a company and secured 600 boxes of glass before the recent advance in price.

Randolph & McClements, East End, are very busy with decorations. At their Oakland place at Schenley Park entrance they have not only fancy chickens, dogs, pigeons, hares and fast horses, but a very nice lot of azaleas and palms.

Breitenstein & Flemm seem to be busy all the time. Their large windows are always tastefully arranged. Thos. Ulam, Neff, Murdock and Smith are not behind the times either.

The growers are praying for some clear weather.

BAER.

WINCHESTER, VA.—Fire did $300 damage to the greenhouses of Ardern & Pearson, Jan. 19.

RUTLAND, VT.—Mr. S. A. Baker, 117 Park street, has just completed a house 20x80 which will be used for growing lettuce.

PLEASANT HILL, MO.—Mr. Geo. M. Kellogg has had a siege of the grip but is now able to be about again.

LOWELL, MASS.—One feature of the inauguration day arrangements at city hall which attracted a great deal of notice and gained a lot of praise was the floral decoration. The bulk of the work was done by the firm of Whittet & Co., under the personal direction of former Alderman William D. Whittet. Good taste and good judgment were displayed in the entire floral arrangement. Mr. Whittet's floral work was ably supplemented by that of George W. Patten, who put up the mottoes "Welcome," and "Inauguration Day, 1901" which attracted so much admiring comment. The decorative work in the mayor's office was done by Harvey B. Greene.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Various Notes.

If one should dare to remark that trade is quiet he would be looked upon as a back number here. "Sassiety" has been on a rampage now for four months and weddings and other social events of more or less magnitude have followed one another in rapid succession. The decorations for the banquet given at the Midland hotel for the Lumbermen's convention was the swellest job of this month and was executed by Willie Rock. Southern smilax, that most useful of all outside-grown decorative material, was used in large quantities, producing an effect that can not be equaled where bulk is required. In the center of the dining room was a bush made of 200 American Beauties. And what could have been more appropriate for the occasion than real logs hollowed out and filled with roses for table center pieces?

The demand for all kinds of stock is good, but unfortunately roses are off crop and retailers somewhat handicapped in getting enough to fill orders. The California violet which thrives here to perfection is now becoming a glut. Bulbous stock is coming on in supply and of better quality than in former years. Only a few Harrisii lilies are yet to be seen.

Last summer Mr. Ernest Weltner built a range of houses at Nevada, Mo., and is making a specialty of carnations. Judging from the quality of stock he is sending to this market, soil and climatic conditions must be favorable for the production of this flower in that location.

The writer spent a few hours recently in Independence, Mo., visiting the growers. Ed Bunyar has a model place well filled with young rooted stock, of which he makes a specialty, depending largely on a catalogue trade. Ed is sailing right along to prosperity, and is better prepared now than a year ago to meet increasing business. The indefatigable Broman sees more revenue in cut flowers and gives all his attention to that branch of the business.

We have a new firm in town. Two young men, representing themselves as floral artists, have located on one of the upper floors in the Altman building, soliciting orders for decorations. We have not yet had the pleasure of meeting these gentlemen and we do not know how long they intend to remain. H. J. M.

NEWPORT, R. I.—Wm. Hammond, an old time florist and gardener, died Jan. 21, aged 75 years. He was born in Ireland and came to America in 1848. He was at one time in the employ of the late Isaac Buchanan at Astoria, N. Y.

WHITMAN, MASS.—R. E. Moir will add considerable new glass to his plant.

ALTON, ILL.—The annual meeting of the Alton Horticultural Society was held Jan. 19. E. H. Riehl is president and Miss Hanna Davis is secretary.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.—The twenty-first annual meeting of the Arkansas State Horticultural Society was held in this city Jan. 30 and 31.

NEW CASTLE, IND.—The South Park Floral Co. have broken ground for their new range of houses. The cypress material is being supplied by A. Dietsch & Co., Chicago.

Norway

The Queen of Commercial White Carnations.

The modern idea of a commercial variety combines large size with free rapid growth and productiveness, a fine keeper and shipper. It gives us pleasure to offer the white we have all been looking for. A distinct feature is that the flowers are remarkably uniform in size, 3 to 3½ inches in diameter. It is selling rapidly.

Place your order at once.

Price of the above two varieties, $1.50 per doz., $10 per 100, $75 per 1000.

Egypt

A Rich Warm Scarlet Crimson.

A distinct departure from all other crimsons. It has modern commercial stems, long and strong; exquisite spicy odor, beautiful rich glowing color; these are its most distinct features. The flower is large and well formed, 2½ to 3½ inches in diameter. Can be had in good flower by November 1st to 15th. It is a continuous and free bloomer.

Genevieve Lord

The only pink carnation which can claim the proud distinction of having superseded the hitherto invincible William Scott. Genevieve Lord is not only equal to Scott in its palmiest days, but is far superior to that variety in every way. It commands a price that was never obtained for the best Scotts which ever grew. Such a carnation is produced only once in a great while. Place your order early. $5 per 100, $40 per 1000.

LIBERTY.

Bright salmon carnation. Sells for either red or pink; an early and continuous bloomer; perfectly healthy plant; stiff stems, 18 inches, never splits calyx; sells for 2 and 4 cents when Scotts bring 1½ and 2 cents. The most free-blooming carnation I ever saw; it is a pleasure to grow, pick or sell it. $1.50 per dozen, $10 per 100, $60 per 1,000. M. L. Tirrell, Randolph, Mass.

ROOTED CARNATION CUTTINGS.

We can supply all the newer and standard varieties at the lowest market prices. All stock offered by us is grown by carnation specialists and is guaranteed good, healthy, true to name stock. All cuttings shipped direct from greenhouses.

W. J. & M. S. VESEY, Fort Wayne, Ind.

NORWAY.

The biggest commercial white carnation ever introduced. A business-making, money-making carnation in every sense of the word. It combines large size, length and strength of stem, wonderfully vigorous growth and is a free and continuous bloomer.

EGYPT. Scarlet-crimson and the first really good dark carnation that can boast of first-class commercial stems and is good, solid odor. The best keeper of all dark varieties.

Price of the above two varieties, $1.50 per doz., $10.00 per 100, $75.00 per 1,000.

GENEVIEVE LORD. The only pink carnation which can rightfully lay claim to having superseded Scott, and it commands a price beyond the reach of the best Scotts which ever grew. It is having a great second-year run. Ready now. Price: $5.00 per 100; $40.00 per 1,000.

Prosperity, Roosevelt, Irene, Queen Louise, Dorothy, Lorna, Mermaid and other new varieties at introducers' prices.

H. WEBER & SONS, Oakland, Md.

CARNATIONS—Continued.

20,000 rooted cuttings, ready to ship. We have enlarged our plant 10,000 feet last summer and will devote our entire time to growing carnations for the trade. We do not expect to make any money this year. Our whole object is to introduce ourselves and stock to the public. To do this we will sell at an extremely low figure, with a standing guarantee that at any time our stock is not satisfactory on receiving, send it back at once at our expense, and if you had paid for same we will refund full amount.

RUSSELL. Again this has proved the most profitable and profitable carnation, giving us so far fully 97 per cent more blooms than Crocker and eight other varieties under same conditions. It never splits its calyx, which Crocker and some others do so badly. After five years' trial, under ordinary culture, it has proved the most profitable and best all-round carnation we ever grew. As large as Scott and of a bright shade of light rose-pink. Strong, well-rooted cuttings now ready at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

Ethel Crocker, $3.00 per 100. McGowen Sport, $1.50 per 100; $10.00 per 1000.

Various Notes.

The state agricultural meeting was held in this city last week. After a few introductory remarks were made on Hall's honeysuckle not being injured by frost, the following papers were read: "The Best Paying Cross," H. Sessions; "Herbs; How to Get and Use," Prof. Lageman; "Horticulture for the Amateur," A. C. Price. Following is the committee for the coming year: Prof. J. H. Lageman, Prof. A. W. Hellerman, Prof. H. Osborne, F. K. Luke, Warren Phelps, L. K. Sutton, Prof. J. W. Smith, J. J. Denny.

The Agricultural Students' Union of Ohio is sending out flower and vegetable seeds to all parts of the state for children to cultivate. The object is to encourage them in farming. After they have grown them they may do as they choose with the products, but are requested to send in a report of the growth and treatment. This is the second year for the flower and vegetable gardens, which have proven very satisfactory.

The florists report a very lively trade the past week, being mostly funeral work. Roses, carnations and violets are very scarce.

Mr. Underwood had a fine stock of poinsettias for the holidays.

E. L. Charles had azaleas in bloom for which he found a ready sale at a good price.

Mr. W. Geiger and Miss Falls, with Mr. A. J. Baldwin, of Newark, O., were recent visitors.

Mr. S. F. Stephens received quite a surprise last Saturday night when his wife, son and two cousins walked in on him unawares. Mrs. Stephens and son left for Germany last fall, stopping at Paris two weeks. They expected to remain until spring, but getting homesick decided to return, which they did much to Mr. Stephens' surprise.

Mr. Stephens has a ventilating apparatus in his new house which was made by one of his employes. It's O. K. No wonder he can grow the finest roses and mums in the city when he has such bright and intelligent employes.

G. E. A

FINE VIOLETS.

We have received from Mr. R. E. Shuplelt, Chatham, N. Y., a bunch of extra fine Marie Louise violets. The flowers arrived in perfect condition, though sent through the mails, still retaining a strong fragrance. The blooms were a fine dark color and averaged one and a half inches in diameter when flattened out. Such violets must command a fancy price at all times. They reflect the greatest credit upon Mr. Shuplelt's ability as a violet grower.

TRADE NOTICE.

The Henry W. Gibbons Company, with a capitalization of $40,000.00, has been incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania, to carry on a general business of horticultural builders, heating engineers and manufacturers of greenhouse structural material generally. The new firm is installing a quantity of specially designed and constructed machinery to facilitate its work. The factory is located at Bloomsburg, Pa., and has access to transportation over the D. L. & W. R. R., Penn. R. R., Lehigh Valley R. R., and the Reading systems.

Henry W. Gibbons, the president of the company, continues at No. 136 Liberty St., New York City, operating his former office as the sales office of the new concern, to which all communications should be addressed. J. L. Dillon, the treasurer, is at the general offices of the factory at Bloomsburg, Pa.

INSECTICIDES.

In a recent communication W. N. Craig, North Easton, Mass., reports his experience with Nicoticide and sums it up as follows:

"So far as our experiments have gone, mealy bug, black and green aphis and red spider have been killed and the only injury done was to Adiantum Fronds. Nikoteen and Aphis Punk, while safe to use on almost all classes of plants, will injure Adiantums somewhat. We believe Nicoticide will prove a valuable addition to our fumigating compounds. Of course further experience is needed, but it is cheaper and much safer to use than hydrocyanic acid gas, which has recently found much favor as an insect destroyer."

MADISON, N. J.—Charles Totty has returned from his visit to England and is again in the harness at Florham Farms.

DIXON, ILL.—O. L. Baird reports that business has been unusually good this month. Mr. Baird says he received much benefit from his visit to Chicago during the carnation meeting of the Chicago Club and from the excursion to Joliet at the same time.

THE QUEEN OF EDGELY.

The Floral Exchange, of Philadelphia, sent a box of the new rose Queen of Edgely to Queen Victoria of England last month. The flowers reached the Queen by Christmas time and the Floral Exchange received the following acknowledgment from England's late lamented Queen:

"The private secretary is commanded by the Queen to thank the president of the Floral Exchange for the beautiful roses which the corporation have been good enough to send to her Majesty, and with which the Queen is greatly pleased.

"The roses arrived in good condition, and are greatly admired by her Majesty, who has desired the expression of her thanks and pleasure to be conveyed to the Floral Exchange corporation for their gift."

It certainly speaks well for the keeping qualities of the rose that blooms carried across the Atlantic and arrived in good condition.

PETOSKEY, MICH.—S. J. Long reports that trade continues good; that with wedding, balls and funerals he is kept busy. Carnations, which are off crop with him, are his best sellers. Besides the stock produced on his own place he has within the past week disposed of 1,000 carnations, 300 roses and a quantity of bulbous stock shipped in from Grand Rapids, which is not a bad record for a town of 5,000. Mr. Long has four houses; one mixed, two carnation and one rose house, yet he is short of flowers most of the time.

SANDUSKY, O.—Mr. M. Hickey, formerly of Chicago, is now in charge at the Central Greenhouses. J. C. Gooding has opened "The Favorite Flower Store" on Hancock street. The florists generally had a good Christmas trade. Just now funeral work is the mainstay and there is sufficient of it to clean up most of the local grown stock.

ALAMEDA, CAL.—Geo. Tyler, the florist, nearly choked a young lady to death the evening of Jan. 19. In the darkness he mistook her for his wife, from whom he had recently separated, and it is charged that it was his intention to kill his wife. Tyler has disappeared.

SACRAMENTO, CAL.—Perry Watson & Co., who conducted a seed business here for about two years, have left the city, and creditors are unable to ascertain the present address of the concern.

UTICA, N. Y.—Frank J. Baker did an elaborate decoration for the Chamber of Commerce banquet Jan. 22.

ORANGE, N. J.—The annual dinner of the New Jersey Floricultural Society takes place Feb. 6.

BLUE POINT, N. Y.—Fire did some damage Jan. 19 to the greenhouses of Hoffman & Warner.

HARTFORD, CONN.—Fire did $300 damage at the greenhouses of G. W. McClunie Jan. 19.

The 42d annual meeting of the Pennsylvania State Horticultural Society was held here Jan. 21 and 22. Treasurer Moon's report showed the society to be in splendid financial condition.

Legislation recommended by the society calls for an appropriation of $147,000 for the erection and equipment of a building at State College for placing the instruction in horticulture and dairying upon a basis commensurate with the importance of the interests to the State, and for continuing the publication of the nature study leaflets issued by the college; a bill, as prepared by Professor John Hamilton, "to prevent diseases of fruit trees and pests that affect the same," and "the establishment of a division of horticulture and pomology in the department of agriculture, to be administered by the secretary of agriculture, and the appointment by the governor of a commissioner of horticulture and pomology, at $2,500 per annum, with a clerk at $1,500."

The exhibit of fruit included pears, apples and several varieties of oranges. Among other carnations was a vase of the new pink "Edna," originated by Lewis Moore, of Unionville, Chester county. A collection of the "Mrs. Southy" geraniums was shown by J. D. Brenneman, of this city.

The officers for the ensuing term are: President, Howard A. Chase, Philadelphia; vice presidents, Calvin Cooper, Bird-in-Hand; W. T. Creasy, Bloomsburg, and M. C. Dunleavy, Carnegie; secretaries, Enos B. Engle, Waynesboro; and W. P. Brinton, Christiana; treasurer, Samuel C. Moon, Morrisville; chairman general fruit committee, N. C. Snavely, Lebanon. The next annual meeting will be held in Bloomsburg.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL.

After reading Mr. Wm. Scott's Manual, we wish to say that we consider it without equal as a book of reference for busy florists.
GEORGE M. KELLOGG.
Pleasant Hill, Mo.

Mr. Scott's superb work, "The Florists' Manual," was indeed worth waiting for. When compared with the amount of practical information it contains, the selling price, $5.00, seems a mere bagatelle.
Oakland, Md. H. WEBER & SONS.

It is the best book of the kind ever published. There is more in it than in any other book I have ever seen. I am delighted with it.
Chicago. JOHN THORPE.

The copy of the "Florists' Manual" was duly received. I am very well pleased with same. The more I read it the better satisfied I am with it, and there are one or two articles alone in it that are each worth all you ask for the book, for everything is made so plain and all details are right to the point. I trust you may have a good and ready sale for the same. M. S. WORDEN.
North Adams, Mass.

The only fault to be found with it is when you get reading it the midnight oil is liable to run low and you hate to go out to bed or reluctantly break off, either going to bed or first taking a look over the houses to see if the temperature tallies with the Manual
Hartford, Conn. GEO. S. OSBORN.

We are in receipt of "The Florists' Manual," by Mr. Scott, and may say it is the right book for the florist, published at the right time. It is what we all need.
BOBBINK & ATKINS.
Rutherford, N. J.

Am much pleased with the Manual. It is just what I have been looking for. Something that we can understand, and enjoy reading.
Etna, Pa. M. NAUMAN.

I am very much pleased with the Manual. It is just what we have needed for a long time. N. ZWEIFEL.
Milwaukee, Wis.

It is certainly a neat and handsome book and does you credit.
BENJAMIN HAMMOND.
Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.

It is a work of art and should be in the hands of all the florists. Its useful and instructive contents cannot fail to be a benefit to all in the trade. C. C. POLLWORTH CO.
Milwaukee, Wis.

I greatly appreciate the Florists' Manual. It is a splendid text-book.
JOHN WELSH YOUNG.
Germantown, Pa.

The Florists' Manual is worth five times the price. It is just what a busy florist wants.
Columbus, O. E. BUEHLER & SON.

Am well pleased with the Manual. It is a practical, everyday helper, concise and to the point. W. A. KENNEDY.
Milwaukee, Wis.

Am very much pleased with the book; it is very handy for reference.
Macomb, Ill. F. E. BONHAM

Unlike so many of our books, it has the very flavor and essence of actual experience.
Ithaca, N. Y. L. H. BAILEY.

We find the book very useful as a reference in answering the many questions about plants that we receive almost every day.
Philadelphia. JOS. KIFT & SON.

We have gotten much valuable instruction from the Florists' Manual and prize it highly.
Franklin, Tenn. TRUETT BROS.

The Florists' Manual is a gem. No florist can afford to be without it.
Madison, N. J. A. J. BAUR.

If everyone has enjoyed your book as I have it's a successful publication. It is different from our usual horticultural works, being plain and concise—just what one wants.
Flushing, N. Y. H. D. DARLINGTON.

I am more than pleased with the Florists' Manual. OTT BROOKS.
Cape May City, N. J.

Manual to hand. Am well satisfied that it is the best work of its kind ever published.
Joliet, Ill. JAS. HARTSHORNE.

No progressive florist, old or young, can afford to be without the Florists' Manual. The old florist needs it, for reference, to read a defective memory, and the young florist wants it as a guide in this progressive craft the florists' business. J. T. TEMPLE.
Davenport, Ia.

The Commissioners of Parks and Boulevards some time since directed that a library be started of such books as would be useful pertaining to park work, and to that end an order has been given for a number of books among which is your "The Florists' Manual."

After reading this book carefully, I am greatly pleased, and wish to congratulate you on the practical manner with which you have treated the subject.

The book is placed where it will be accessible to all of our greenhouse employes, who this board expects to reap a reward many times the cost of the book. Respectfully yours
COMMISSIONERS OF PARKS AND BOULEVARDS, R. J. CORYELL, Gen'l Supt.
Detroit, Mich.

The book is written for the working gardener, and Mr. Scott's reputation is so well secured that he will find among the gardening friends a host of genuine admirers. As a writer on practical gardening subjects, he is a recognized authority. * * * Mr. Scott has long been an employer and knows what information young gardeners, or those with little experience, need, and he has his whole subject so perfectly at command that he can give the most desirable and essential information in the clearest language and with satisfactory brevity. The book is a distinct and important gain to the practical garden literature of this country, and it should be in the hands of every gardener, and everyone else engaged or interested in ornamental horticulture. The price of the book is $5, which seems somewhat high, but for useful information it is worth every cent of it.—Vick's Magazine.

Florists' Manual, by William Scott. Publishers, Florists' Publishing Company, Chicago. Price, $5.

From advance sheets of the Florists' Manual, kindly sent us by the publishers, as well as from Dreer, which have appeared from time to time in the trade press, we have formed an idea of the general scope and usefulness of Mr. Scott's book, and we now hail with a great deal of satisfaction the work as a completed whole. Several handbooks of a more or less similar nature, dealing with commercial plant culture in America, do exist, but these, it rather, have been chased on the market, but the teachings which they impart have, as the years rolled by, become to a greater or less extent obsolete, owing to the continued mutability in methods, and so that the Manual containing, as it does, matter which is strictly up-to-date, and consequently practical, should meet with a ready acceptance among all engaged in the industry upon which it treats. The Manual, as the title says, is in matters horticultural, as too well known to the trade to require any comment at our hands, suffice it to say, that the same soundness of doctrine, and masterful handling of every subject dealt with, so fully characterize the text of all books described here as. Nearly 200 individual items are described and, as regards plants listed, those of commercial value, the supply of the trade receiving greatest attention.—Florists' Exchange.

The Florists' Manual, by Wm. Scott. Florists' Publishing Co., Chicago. A reference book for commercial florists.

The author's first aim in preparing this work was to fill a long felt want among florists—a book describing the best plants commercially, with cultural advice founded on experience. Viewed in this light, it is a valuable and instructive work, very complete in its details; but it need not be confined to circulation among the florists and others commercially connected, although gardeners and amateurs need not expect in it a work exactly fitting their requirements. Rather judge it through the author's own words, i. e.: "If those who favor us with a perusal of its pages glean only one hint which may help them * * * they will have received value for their money." A work resulting from Mr. Scott's long and varied experience, "from selling a bunch of violets over the counter to planting a tree or seeding a lawn or building a greenhouse," cannot but throw out many hints of value to any one interested in any line of horticulture or flower gardening. The comparatively small index confronting the reviewer at first is far from encouraging, but as the purpose of the author is more clearly brought to light, it is better appreciated. It shows the intention to treat of the most desirable and profitable things to handle—a consideration which many will enjoy. Many interesting subjects are brought to headings, such as "Easter Plants," "Watering," "Decorations," "Potting," "Bedding Plants," etc. Not the least of value to the possessor of this book are the beautiful half-tone illustrations, numbering more than 100, and thoroughly illustrating the subjects treated. Critical persons may object to the interspersing of advertisements with the reading matter, though it is not made very obtrusive; yet it must be remembered that the work is designed for commercial purposes, and not strictly as a library book.—Meehan's Monthly.

THE FLORISTS' MANUAL...

By WM. SCOTT

IS A BOOK of 224 large pages (same size as those of the Florists' Review) and contains about 200 articles on commercial plants and cultural operations, each giving "the meat" only, from the personal experience of a thoroughly practical man who is in daily touch with each department of the business and who has that rare quality of being able to tell others what they want to know. The articles are arranged alphabetically, like those in an encyclopædia, and in an instant one can turn to the subject upon which light is desired at the moment. The book is illustrated by over 200 fine half-tone engravings. It is and is a whole library on practical commercial floriculture in one volume. It is very handsomely and substantially bound in half leather, with specially designed title in gold.

Price, $5.00 Carriage Prepaid.

FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO., Caxton Building, CHICAGO.

The above mentioned book is one that you need in your business—One that you can't afford to be without.

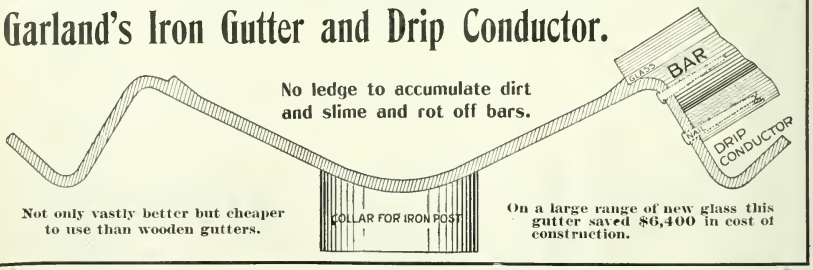
will make you $80 the first year and $120 a year for the following 30 years.

You can do it by using the GARLAND IRON GUTTER and iron posts in your next new houses. In connected houses, 20x100 each, the GARLAND IRON GUTTER and iron post construction will cost $40.00 per house more than a wooden gutter and wooden posts. And by means of the gutter you can arrange your benches so as to get 300 square feet more available bench surface than in the old way. This space is worth at least 40 cents a square foot and therefore a total of $120.00. Deducting the $40.00 extra cost of the iron gutters and posts you have a net profit of $80.00 the first year, and the full $120.00 a year for following years.

Garland's Iron Gutter and Drip Conductor.



This, to say nothing of the fact that wooden construction would have to be rebuilt at the end of 15 years, while the iron construction will stand for from 30 to 50 years or indefinitely.

One large grower saved $6,400.00 in his construction by using GARLAND'S IRON GUTTER and iron posts. The iron gutters cost $1,600.00 more than wooden gutters would have cost. But he gained 15,000 square feet of space. To cover this space with ordinary construction would cost at least $8,000.00. So deducting the $1,600.00 of extra cost for the iron construction he was $6,400.00 in pocket, to say nothing of having houses that would last twice or three times as long as with wooden construction.

You Can't Afford to Miss This Great Saving.

Several of the largest growers in the West have taken advantage of this. They are satisfied that the GARLAND IRON GUTTER and iron post construction is not only the cheapest in the long run but the cheapest the first year too. Write any of them about it.

REPORT OF THE JUDGES

APPOINTED BY THE PHILADELPHIA FLORISTS' CLUB TO JUDGE OUR

GRAND NEW ROSE

QUEEN OF EDGELY

PINK AMERICAN BEAUTY.

"We are convinced that this variety is a valuable addition to the list of forcing roses, being in every respect, except color, the exact counterpart of the American Beauty. The color is a beautiful bright pink, which is good, even in the full flowers. The fragrance is also as fine as that of Beauty, and the exhibited blooms showed remarkable vigor."

ROSES

ROSE NOTES.

The American Beauty.

I never use any manure water before spring, but like to put on a thin mulch of old well-rotted manure as soon as the benches are cleaned of weeds and the bed is watered all over. This is not used as a stimulant, but to prevent the soil from drying out too quickly. About November 1 give a mulch and then generally no more till the end of January or the first part of February, and one more mulching after that. I use manure water freely from January on until the plants are discarded, but do not believe in feeding before Jan. 1.

Deformed or undeveloped flowers are the result of weakness of the plant or a check in its growth. The last may be due to the plant's being too dry or too wet, or from cold draughts, fumigating, and various minor causes. In fumigating we must keep in mind that when the plants are tall and the buds close to the glass they will naturally get more smoke and more of that dry heat so injurious to roses than when of the same height as the other roses. Many buds are thus crippled when in the first stage of development, and the best treatment can not entirely restore them after once receiving a serious check from any cause. The result of a check is often not noticeable in the appearance of the plants, but when we begin to cut deformed flowers we are set to speculating as to the cause. Though the roses may have had the best of attention for some time past, there was a cause, and it may date back several weeks or more.

I aim to keep the temperature at 58 to 60 degrees at night. At 60 degrees I put a crack of air on, and would prefer to keep some air on all the time if possible. During the day I give them 65 to 66 degrees with steam heat and no sun. On bright sunny days, 70 to 75 degrees, according to the temperature out of doors. Never open the ventilators much when the air outside is very cold. A small crack will admit a lot of air under such conditions.

The plants and benches should be always kept clean of decayed leaves and no rubbish should ever be thrown under the benches. Tying should never be neglected. Each branch should be tied separately to the wire in such a way that it will not interfere with the others when the flower is cut.

Beauties can be grown with good success for two years and many think they are better the second year than the first. When this is so it is no doubt due to the fact that the plants are older and stronger, and this confirms my belief in early planting of the young stock. We want strong bushes before winter sets in. In growing Beauties the second year I find it best to dry them off and let the wood ripen thoroughly. I dry them off gradually and am careful not to allow the bark to shrivel, syringing hard occasionally to keep red spider down. It takes about four weeks to do it properly.

Old and weak wood is then cut out and the rest cut back to five or six eyes. They are then taken up in a dry state, with about a 6-inch ball of soil and replanted in a rich soil. A basin is left around each plant and the plants have to be well watered several times to get the dry ball thoroughly saturated. After this they need very little water till they start to grow. The watering must be done very carefully for overwatering will result in almost entire loss. The first growth will not be very long, but it will be much stronger than on young plants. There will also be more branches and the plants should be placed farther apart than young stock. One point in favor of two-year-old stock is you can cut much sooner from them than from one-year-old. After they have once started to grow they will soon overtake young stock that was planted a month earlier.

GRAFTING ROSES.

In answering the questions which arise in the article on "Grafting Roses" in your last issue I wish to state that actually there is no comparison between grafting and budding roses, in accordance with my understanding. The process is entirely different and cannot be made to apply each to the other. Budding is a simple matter that may be successfully accomplished, during the summer months only, by inserting an eye in the bark and binding. The best results are obtained from well developed young shoots in moderately moist soil. It can be done both in and outdoors while grafting is effected indoors only, during the winter season. It consists of splitting, inserting a scion, binding and making air tight with wax; requiring a close moist atmosphere.

The benefits derived from the use of the Wardian case are these: In an ordinary greenhouse the ventilating varies the temperature very materially, rendering it impossible to maintain the uniform moist atmosphere made possible by the use of the case, which is so necessary to the entirely successful grafting of roses. In order to become established and united the scion requires warmth and dampness, the lack of which, when subject to change of temperature, allows the scion to shrink and refuse to unite.

It might be possible to graft a rose outside a case after having grown it for a year and forcing it in the same place, as it would thus be so well established that the union could take place at once, without being sensitive to change of temperature and atmosphere. This, however, is merely a case of possibility and not practicality. Since the use of the case saves time and plants, and these factors mean money to all florists and nurserymen, it would seem the most practical measure to adopt.

I have been very successful in this work and perhaps some one may be interested in my methods. Take a glass case 2 feet high and 2 feet by 4 long with a side door (for swatting), place on a cutting bench in which there is a hole through which you can place pans of water on the pipes, the evaporation of which causes a moist heat. On top of bench make an opening 5x6 inches which is 6 inches high, with cover, through which temperature of case is regulated. Fill the bench with clean sand and put in 3 or 4 inch pots according to size of roots and place under a cool bench for 14 days, with sufficient moisture. At the expiration of this time sink pots in sand in case and syringe once each day, beginning at a temperature of 50 degrees and increasing to 75 degrees, syringing twice daily.

The scions should be cut in the fall from outdoor grown roses and placed in a cool cellar in moist sand. After the potted stock has a good start and throws out shoots, begin grafting. I prefer grafting behind the bark rather than splitting. Use plenty of wax to render it air tight, and raffia for binding. In about three weeks remove plants which have made a good growth from case, place on a bench shaded from sun in about same temperature of case for first week, gradually lower and finally place in an ordinary carnation house with plenty of fresh air.

I prefer the Rosa canina or English Sweet Briar for outdoor grown roses, but Manetti stock is fine for forcing roses. I raise my own seedlings and use the second and sometimes the first year. This article represents grafting on a small scale only but where wholesale quantities are desired a greenhouse can be managed on exactly the same plan.

ROSE TROUBLES.

I have one house of roses that is a perfect failure. I have not averaged one rose a day from the whole house this winter. The plants were nice and thrifty when benched last June and they have had the best of attention as to heat, water and ventilation. I have been growing roses here for 15 years and have never had any trouble of the kind before. The soil, which is a dark clay loam, was not as heavy as it ought to be and there was a little very fine sand in it, but it was such good soil for crops I thought it would do all right if well firmed.

The plants seem free from disease and look green but they don't grow very much and once in a while there will be a plant the leaves of which will come out thin and soon wilt and then the whole plant dies. I used no bone meal and nothing but old cow dressing to enrich the soil. I keep the temperature from 55 to 60 degrees at night. I can't see over ten buds, large and small, to the hundred plants now. Can you tell me what the trouble is? H. W.

It is possible the soil may be too light and not rich enough but this would not account for the dying off of the plants when they are otherwise well treated. It is evident that the plants are infested with eel-worms and if H. W. will take up some of the plants he will probably find the roots covered with the galls or knots caused by the presence of this microscopic pest.

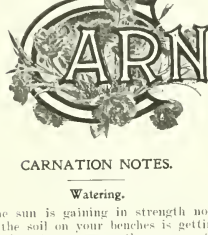
There is no remedy that will kill the eel-worms which will not at the same time injure the plants, but the trouble can be kept somewhat in check with lime water, using a peck of lime to 30 gallons of water. Or air slaked lime may be dusted over the surface of the bed and then a thorough watering given, this operation to be repeated every two or three weeks.

However, in such an aggravated case as that described by our correspondent the best plan would be to throw out the plants and use the house for something else. M. Stauch.



CARNATION NOTES.

Watering.

The sun is gaining in strength now, and the soil on your benches is getting full of roots; consequently more water will be needed to keep your carnations in good condition. Watch the weather closely and give plenty of water on bright days as the warm sun will soon cause the blooms to open up smaller if the plants are suffering from drought. Notice the edges of the benches and especially on the south side as they will need watering oftener than the center of the benches.

Of course we will have spells of cloudy weather yet for several weeks and during such spells the soil should not be kept too wet, but notice carefully the condition of the soil every time a bright day comes along. A full day of sunshine will dry out the soil enough after a good watering so it will not hurt even if the next few days are cloudy. During the early winter months when the sun is weak and the soil dries out slowly the greatest danger lies in getting the soil too wet and sour; but now the soil is full of roots and dries out quickly and the danger is just the opposite during bright weather.

Liquid Feeding.

If you have a fair amount of bright weather an occasional dose of liquid manure will be beneficial, but if it continues cloudy most of the time you had better wait a few weeks. I do not believe in much liquid feeding during cloudy weather anyway, as it is apt to make the growth and the blooms soft and many of the pink varieties take on a bluish cast which diminishes their commercial value. The mulch you put on last month will run them for some time, and into the good weather, which will be here in a few weeks. Most growers agree that half-rotted cow manure is the best manure for the body of the liquid and about three-quarters of a bushel is enough for fifty gallons of water for the first dose. Let this stand a few days before using. After using all the liquid fill up again and add some other kind of food to give them a change of diet. A peck of sheep manure, a gallon of hen manure, a 5-inch pot of bone flour or a pound of nitrate of soda, any of these added to the cow manure will be found beneficial. Give them a dose about once in ten days or two weeks at the beginning and choose a bright day to do it. Later on the applications may be more frequent and once each week is not too often.

There are many ways of putting it on and on some places they have it down to a science. Several places I know of have vats or cisterns for holding the liquid and a steam pump to force it through the water pipes, and it is put on with the hose just like the clear hydrant water. But we are not all fortunate enough to own such a convenience and so we must turn to the next best thing which is the "Kinney Pump." This little device is certainly worth its weight in gold and every grower who has twenty pounds of water pressure ought to own one. The man who invented it deserves to have all his sins forgiven even if he never does another good deed in all his life. The old way of carrying the liquid in watering pots is behind the times where any quantity is used and on the large places it would be far too expensive. Think of some of the large Chicago growers, for instance, trying to water their whole place in that way. They would never get through.

Chemical Fertilizers.

During the last four years the tendency seems to have been toward using chemical fertilizers. There is no doubt that they are cleaner, cheaper and easier applied than the natural manures when they are handled by a man who knows what he is about; but many a crop is ruined by chemicals in the hands of men who know but little about their properties. We need a better knowledge of chemistry than 99 per cent of the growers possess, before we can use that form of plant-food extensively and with safety.

A few years ago there was some talk of establishing a school where some of our rich florists could send their sons to study the use of chemicals, etc., in growing plants and flowers. Perhaps it would have done some good to the few who were fortunate enough to be able to take advantage of it, but if any real good is to result from such an undertaking it should be planned so that every grower who wishes to can take advantage of it without incurring much expense. It is those of moderate means who do the work and grow the fine stock, and I have yet to see the "son of a big gun" who is a great success at growing either plants or cut flowers. They usually go into the office and look after that end of the business and trust to their foreman to do the growing. If the grower (be he foreman or not) possesses a thorough knowledge of chemical plant foods it will do much more good than if the young man in the office possesses it. The man who looks after the plants day in and day out and has had years of experience can judge better what they need even if his schooling has not been so extensive as that of the man who merely peeps into the houses every day or two and perhaps has had no practical experience in the growing part of the business.

If a course in chemistry could be given by mail at a moderate cost and I can see no reason why it should not be done, every grower who takes any interest in his work would willingly pay a fair fee and take up such a course. In fact, he would be obliged to do so because if he did not, the men who do acquire that knowledge would soon crowd him out of all the most desirable positions, or out of the business altogether. It is only a question of time when every grower will be required to possess more or less knowledge of chemistry as a part of his education in plant growing. The average grower of to-day knows but little of such matters and it is but little short of dangerous to the plants for them to use chemicals to any great extent. It seems to me that one of the national societies could take this matter up and do a world of good without much expense. It would easily pay for itself.

Stem Supports.

Those stems that are to produce those 4-inch blooms for Baltimore should be supported sufficiently. A thin stake to hold up each bud is needed by some varieties in order to have straight stems. Mrs. Bradt, for instance, makes a strong stem which will hold the massive bloom erect if it is supported until the bloom is developed; but the bud is so heavy that if the highest support is several inches below the bud it will bend the stem as it grows heavier and the stem will grow that way. The blooms will develop better too, if the light is equally strong from all sides. You can judge almost to a certainty which buds to select unless the weather takes a decided change. Most varieties should show color at least two weeks before they are to be cut and some will take even longer to develop properly. Remember that they will have no time to grow after they reach Baltimore and so they should be well matured and have their full size when they are staged. Be sure and place them in water at least twenty-four hours before packing.

If you fondly imagine that your seedling is unequaled by any other variety, by all means take it down to Baltimore and see for yourself. A large carnation grower told me a few days ago that these exhibitions are the best place for a man to have the conceit taken out of him and I guess he spoke the truth.

A. F. J. Baur.

LAWSON CARNATION BUDS SPLITTING.

There seems to be trouble with some growers in regard to splitting of the Lawson during the past month and many inquiries as to its cause.

If you are running a night temperature of 50 to 52 degrees, which often means on a cold morning a drop to 48 degrees, try raising the night temperature to 55 with 52 as the danger mark.

If feeding with liquid manure, substitute a top dressing of sheep manure (pulverized), about two handsful to the row on a 5-foot bench every two weeks, and an occasional dusting of air slacked lime.

If your plants are well established and vigorous I think the trouble will cease.

Peter Fisher.

Ellis, Mass.

CARNATION TEMPERATURES.

Mr. Chas. Knopf, Richmond, Ind., advises us that what he meant to say in the discussion at the carnation meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club as regards carnation temperatures was that he maintains a temperature of 46 to 48 degrees and that 50 degrees is considered high.

DAHLIAS.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph taken last fall of a field of dahlias on the grounds of Messrs. Rowehl & Granz, Hicksville, L. I., N. Y.

They write that the field illustrated was planted rather late, planting being begun the 12th of June and finished the second week in July. They plant the tubers in rows in the same way that a farmer plants potatoes. They cultivate with the Planet Jr. horse hoe till the buds show and then they hill them up with a Planet Jr. celery hiller. The hilling is merely to make the plants better able to stand up and resist being blown down by the wind.

They found the weather fairly favorable to dahlias last season and did very well with them. They sent a good many cut flowers to the New York market and received very satisfactory prices for them. Blooms of such varieties as Grand Duke Alexis, Souv. de Mme. Meron and Miss May Lomas generally brought $2.00 to $3.50 per 100, while A. D. Livoni, White Swan, Queen Victoria, Yellow Bird and Catherine brought $1.00 to $1.25 per 100.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES.

Stock Plants.

With the turn of the year the thoughts of the mum grower turn to his stock plants and he begins to make his plans for another year. Some growers keep their stock plants in a cold-frame, covering the pots with leaves, and protecting the glass on cold nights. This plan in as mild a winter as this has been works admirably, and the cutting will before long be pushing up in a satisfactory manner. In a very hard winter it does not work so well, and a corner in the violet house is a better place.

Of course a great many florists grow mums only in a small way, and room in every direction is very limited till after Easter, but it is a shame to do as so many of them do, put their stock plants under the benches in the carnation house or somewhere, and then wonder why they don't get as good cuttings as somebody else. A florist of this ilk came around last year just as a fine bench of Robinson was coming in with us. He was lost in amazement at our "giganteum" strain, as he chose to call it, and was very anxious to secure some stock. He got it but I would like to gamble that the "giganteum" strain will degenerate into a very mediocre strain with him by flowering time.

Cuttings.

Good growers have hammered away at the theme of selection of cuttings not only in mums, but carnations and roses and many other things for years past but still so many florists drift along, seemingly content with any old thing in the shape of a cutting they can lay their hands on.

Of course varieties will degenerate in time. It is only obedience to the law of the survival of the fittest, but many good varieties have had their downward career prematurely hastened by careless propagation and unnatural treatment.

We always take the strongest and healthiest cuttings, as soon as the plant has done flowering, using only such plants as have produced perfect flowers, and are free from disease. When the cuttings are rooted we throw away the old plants and box off the young stock into flats and place in a cool house for the winter: 40 to 45 degrees is plenty warm enough, and after being stopped once these young plants will give a good crop of fine healthy cuttings in just the right condition to root easily and grow away strongly.

Some good men have argued against the practice of striking cuttings in the fall, claiming that by so doing the plants get no rest. I don't see it that way myself. If the young plants are kept in a low temperature, they make very little top growth till the sun gets warm in the early spring. A mum is never really at rest. The only dormant mums are like the only good Indians, dead ones.

On the old stools, just as soon as the flowering shoots are cut off and even before, the suckers commence to come up freely from bottom and continue doing so. I am positive that one variety, Golden Wedding, gets better every year with us by rooting cuttings in the fall and propagating the tops in the spring.

Specimens.

If you intend growing a few plants for specimens it is high time the cuttings were rooted. To get large plants you must have a long season of growth. Root them cool and grow them cool. Then they will keep strong and sturdy and when the warm weather comes will branch out with astonishing vigor.

BRIAN BORU.

SOLID BEDS OR RAISED BENCHES.

A correspondent wants to know whether early varieties of mums do best in solid beds or raised benches. Unquestionably I would say grow them on raised benches, either early or late varieties. Then you have the roots absolutely under control and can feed the plants or dry them off a little to throw them into bud if they are late, or do anything you want with them. Five inches of soil is plenty to grow the best mums in that ever were grown.

BRIAN BORU.

Field of Dahlias on the grounds of Rowehl & Granz, Hicksville, L. I., N. Y.

GERANIUMS.

The stems of our geraniums turn black from the roots up, then soften and the plants die. What is the cause of it and what can we do for them? W. G. T.

We seldom see geraniums go off in the way described after they have once made roots, still we have occasionally. Nowadays every disease is traced to a specific cause and there is a bacterium for each individual trouble. There has even been discovered a microbe that causes some people to deviate from the truth, which has been named "Bacillus prevaricata." Thank goodness the microbes that are useful to man far outnumber those that are injurious.

Speaking seriously, this rotting of the tissue of the succulent geranium stem is doubtless caused by bacteria, but what encourages it is what we want to know. Too much water with little circulation of air is the principal cause. In the winter when geraniums are kept at a low temperature, say 40 to 45 degrees, they need very little water. When we pot our cuttings about this date without putting them in the sand we give them one good watering and for the next three weeks are very careful to keep them only wet enough to prevent wilting. If we watered carelessly we would lose many of them from blackened stem.

Give your plants all the sunlight you can, air on all possible occasions, and if cool keep them on the dry side till active growth begins in brighter weather.

Wm. Scott.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Hyacinths and Tulips.

I have never believed in forcing the Dutch hyacinths very early. They are not badly needed and are not very satisfactory. Now they will force easily and by the time they are in flower the sun will be higher and there will be more demand for plants and they sell.

Tulips from now on force with less heat but still need a little shade to lengthen their stems. Give them plenty of water at the root every day and moisture all around them helps to develop them. We occasionally get a disappointment through the tulips wilting badly after they are cut and this is especially so of those that are forced in a high temperature. As soon as the flowers are well developed the flats should be removed to a cooler house. This will somewhat remedy the wilting but the right thing is to cut tulips and put the stems in cold water 24 hours before they are used, then they have gotten over all wilting. This is the plan adopted with lily of the valley and we all know that if cut from the bed and used in designs at once it wilts badly, though if placed in water for 24 hours it will stand up wherever used.

Deutzias.

It will now be time to bring your deutzias into a temperature of 50 degrees. They take seven or eight weeks to nicely develop their flowers and are much better grown moderately cool than when forced at a high temperature. There is one point in the forcing of all deciduous shrubs that is not always thought of and that is syringing. Remember how the grape grower does when he first starts his vines in February or March. He keeps them continuously syringed, even when they are started say at 45 degrees, which they always should be. The syringing and the moist atmosphere it creates helps very much to loosen up the buds and nourish the opening leaves. All such things as lilacs, deutzias and other deciduous shrubs should be often syringed. The less active the roots the more the syringing is beneficial.

To bring out rhododendrons they also should have plenty of moisture and a night temperature of 60 degrees. Others may have found that a lower temperature will do but our experience is that without a good brisk heat and plenty of syringing the buds will remain a long time without any sign of a move.

Seed Sowing.

There is not much to sow just now providing you have sown cannas, which to obtain good sized plants should be sown soon after New Year's. Petunias can be sown about the middle of this month. As I have often said, get the very best strain you can find and we sow only the seed advertised as double, of which, if it is a good strain, about 40 per cent will come double and the remainder will be fine single flowers. The double flowers are always in demand and if customers select a dozen they are sure to want the double but really they make no finer a bed than the single, in fact not so good. Petunia seed has lots of vitality but it is very small and you are very likely to sow it too thickly. It wants only pressing into the soil and when once well up should have the full light in a cool house or it will draw up thin and spindling in a very few days.

With the exception of some very early asters it is a month too soon to sow the general run of hardy annuals. It is, however, a good time to sow seeds of many of the desirable hardy perennials. Not as good as September for if sown in September and wintered in a cold-frame many of them will flower the following season while only a few will flower next summer if sown now. Yet it is a good time, for you do not have the trouble and risk of carrying them over winter. Sow now and you can plant them out in cold-frames in April and the following August they will be fine plants and can be transplanted to the permanent beds or borders. Digitalis, aquilegia, Lobelia cardinalis, corcopsis, heuchera, asclepias, helenium and many others.

Gloxinias.

We always believe that the gloxinia should be treated as a midsummer flowering plant, for in July and August there is a dearth of flowering plants. Our neighbors have, however, been starting in much earlier and have them in flower in May and June and then the late grown ones are not much noticed. You can start them at once if you think you need them in flower in May.

We start them in 3-inch pots in soil that is half loam and half leaf-mould and sand. After the first watering keep them rather dry till the leaves have started. Gloxinias are difficult plants to handle when once the leaves are any size so when there are sufficient roots in the 3-inch pots and the leaves have made a growth of two or three inches I believe in shifting them at once into their flowering pots. For ordinary sized bulbs a 5-inch pot is plenty large enough.

The best gloxinias I ever grew were the result of taking the greatest pains with the watering. They wilt quickly when dry and are easily injured by overwatering. In fact they want the most careful attention. They will thrive best without their foliage ever being wet, but on bright mornings when evaporation is rapid it may do no harm. A good porous soil, careful watering, a night temperature of 55 to 60 degrees and good light without the direct rays of the sun, are the essentials for success with gloxinias.

SAVING OF SPACE AND OTHER BENEFITS OF THE IRON GUTTER AND IRON POSTS.

By Geo. M. Garland, Des Plaines, Ill.
(Read before the Chicago Florists' Club, February 1, 1901.)

Mr. President and Brother Florists: The ordinary method of greenhouse construction has been so thoroughly discussed by Mr. Carmody and others that there remains but little to be said on that subject, but owing to the inability of a great many to understand the advantages of the method advocated by myself, it gives me pleasure to address you this evening, confining myself to permanent construction by the use of iron gutters and posts.

The post and gutter is the foundation of the house, and is also the vital part thereof, therefore care should be taken to supply a foundation that will not rot out in about one-third the time the house would otherwise last. In my life experience in the business the necessity of continual rebuilding set me to thinking, and as necessity is the mother of invention the iron gutter resulted from my endeavors to practice economy.

With all important business enterprises the key to success is economy. The paramount question with a successful business man is not how large is my store or factory, but how much business have I transacted and what are my profits therefrom. So, also, with greenhouse establishments. It is not how much glass have I, as is the usual custom of referring to one's place, but how much bench space have I, and what can I realize from the same.

In many large establishments the unnecessary waste of room which is allowed for shade and drips from leaky and bungly gutters amounts to more than several medium sized establishments. Nearly all the ordinary wood constructed greenhouses visited by me have an allowance of 5 feet from the south bench in north house to the north bench in south house; 2 feet allowed for walk, 12 inches for gutter and posts, 2 feet for next walk, there being a walk on both sides of gutter posts. It is not only the expense incurred in the erection of non-producing space which should be taken into consideration, but the extra draft on one's bank account for the furnishing of coal to heat this space through the many winters to come.

This fact being carefully weighed I began the work of providing a method of permanent construction, obtainable without increasing the cost of the same. This was accomplished by using iron gutters and posts, there being no leaks from same, and drips being carried off by drip conductor. I found the same room could be obtained with about 3 feet less construction, or 15 per cent of a 20-foot house, making 3 feet less glass to heat or a saving of 15 per cent of the fuel ordinarily required.

In the American Florist of Aug. 18, 1900, appeared the following item: "In the range which Mr. Peter Reinberg put up this year, he was enabled by the use of the iron gutter to secure four benches as against three by his former method of construction."

This is not all that was gained, but a construction, which according to a statement, from one of our oldest florists in this section, from whom I am pleased to quote, will last three times as long and perhaps longer than the ordinary wood constructions. Mr. F. Stiebow of Niles Center, who was obliged to rebuild three times and now has iron gutters, says, according to a clipping from the Florists' Review of May 10, 1900, that he expects his grandchildren to get just as good results from these houses as he does and that they will be new for an indefinite period.

To accomplish this saving of room build your house 20 or 26 feet 8 inches wide and lay it out in 5-foot benches and 20-inch walks, starting with the first walk along the north side of house, and allowing 20 inches for same, then a 5-foot bench, 20-inch walk, 5 foot bench, 20-inch walk, and a 5-foot bench, allowing the last bench to extend to gutter posts, which are of 2-inch pipe, and you will have 15 feet of bench in a 20-foot house, and an extra bench, or 20 feet of bench, in a 26-foot 8-inch house, or three-quarters of your house to producing space. The old method of construction with wood gutters and posts is 24-inch walk, 5 foot bench, 20-inch walk, 5-foot bench, 20-inch walk, 5-foot bench, 24-inch walk, and 10-inch wood post, or 23 feet 2 inches from center to center of gutter, or 15 foot of bench in a 23-foot house.

The old method of steep roofs and low gutters should be avoided. Set your gutters 6 feet from the ground, and your houses sufficiently flat so that one does not shade the other, giving the north bars 28 degrees pitch, and the south bars 35 degrees pitch, and in the short days the bench nearest the gutter will be exposed to the action of the sun from the south house, the shade from ridge and gutter falling in the center of the house, in dark or shady days, and traveling to within six inches to one foot of post in June, when shade is not as detrimental as in midwinter.

For posts use 2-inch iron pipe above ground and cast iron legging set in a hole made with a 6-inch post auger, and fill in with good cement, bringing the same well above the ground, and taper off to meet casting. I find cement an excellent preserver of iron, and all iron intended for use in the ground should be coated with it.

Those who have used my method of construction were able to erect 250 feet of gutter in 8 hours, using 5 men, and I have known a run of 250 feet to have been set up in five hours. Those who wish to know how this was done can find out by asking Peter Reinberg.

In selecting an iron gutter, lightness combined with strength and durability are essential points. These are obtainable in the V-shaped or Garland gutter, this shape forming a truss, giving it a carrying capacity of over two tons, the outer edge of gutter extending downward affords a means of connecting the sash bar to gutter on a nearly perpendicular surface, thereby avoiding a ledge that would prove a catch-all for slime and dirt, which is the principal cause of bars rotting off at lower ends.

The perpendicular surface being always dry, gives an increased life to the bar.

Another advantage which should not be overlooked is the saving of glass from breakage by frost and ice. Iron absorbs sufficient heat from the house to keep it continually thawed, consequently no ice can form on gutter, therefore no breakage of glass from that source. To better demonstrate this point, on a cold, icy day, when you are down town, note that the iron work, such as side walk lights, steps, etc., on all side walks, under which artificial heat is supplied, are free from ice or snow, while all similar wooden construction is coated with ice and snow.

Immediately after a fall of snow, melting at the ridges sets in, and the water, running down to the wooden gutters freezes fast, forming a ridge up over the first pane of glass, and preventing the snow from sliding down. With iron gutters the conditions are reversed, the snow melting first in the gutter, keeping the same smooth, so that the snow can readily slide down to the gutter, and pass off in the form of water in the coldest weather, thus relieving the house of snow and exposing the glass to the action of the sun in one-third the time which is an important factor when sunlight is at a premium.

The following is taken from the Florists' Exchange of March 10, 1900: "One of the heaviest snow storms in this locality in 16 years fell in twenty-four hours the past week. It was a good test for the Garland iron gutter, which did its work perfectly. As soon as snow begins to fall, thawing sets in until there is a good stream of water flowing steadily. Mr. Strombach of Lincoln Park has his new plant house all fitted with iron gutters of the old Garland pattern. We saw the snow piled up the morning after the storm but fast disappearing by a regular stream of water below. Mr. Strombach told the writer the second day after that the snow had all gone off naturally, and no trouble whatever was experienced."

The principle of contraction and expansion of metals has probably caused numerous florists to look with disfavor on iron gutters, but practical experience on 300-foot houses as erected by Wietor Brothers failed to show anything to substantiate their fears. The joints of gutter are firmly bolted together, using Portland cement between the laps, making one continuous casting which is so rigid that the gutter can not "snake" or go out of line, thereby holding the ridge in its original position. The uniform temperature maintained within the houses prevents any appreciable fluctuations in the temperature of the iron and thereby removes the cause of expansion and contraction such as iron fully exposed to the action of the weather is subject to.

To further support the frame of the house I have provided a means of connecting a number six galvanized wire, with suitable screw fastening at each end, having a one-fourth inch hole in the flange of gutter, through which said screw fastenings are passed, and having a nut in the under side of flange for tightening wire. This wire is passed over both purlins and into opposite gutter, with similar fastenings, and not only effectually prevents the purlin from waving in high winds, but also creating a means of supporting the ridge pole without the use of ridge pole posts, thereby saving expense in construction. I recommend that these wires be placed 15 feet apart.

I have advertised to provide waterway for 4,000 feet of glass, which to some seems incredible. Thorough examination of the outer edge of gutter shows a rise and depression, forming a stop for the glass, which has ample room for putty, making a watertight joint, allowing the lower lights to serve as auxiliary gutters, creating a gutter four feet wide in case of emergency, which seldom occurs.

Mr. Carmody in his address at the S. A. F. convention at New York, like many other florists who do not seem to understand that greenhouses containing an equal amount of bench can be constructed for less money with iron gutters and posts than with cheap wooden affairs, refers to iron gutters, iron pipe, etc., as being all good in their way if one has the money to buy them. But the poor man will always commence business in wooden structures, of course, including wooden gutters.

But after a careful study of my method of construction you will find that it is especially designed for the poor man, who must get all the bench space possible, without extra expense for construction and heating.

Trusting that all may see the point as I, and others do, and profit thereby, I will terminate my paper, hoping at some future day to more fully discuss the advantages of permanent construction.

IRON CONSTRUCTION OF GREENHOUSES vs. WOOD.

By W. N. Rudd.

Read before the Chicago Florists' Club, Feb. 1.]

Having never had any experience with a complete iron frame greenhouse, the writer wishes to add a sub-title to the above, as follows: What I Think I Know and What I Guess on the Subject (with apologies to Mr. Carmody for infringement of copyright).

The first greenhouses we erected here were on the old style, white cedar posts, white pine roof plan, with 2-inch pine box gutters (we got good pine those days), pine purlins and pine supports. They were pretty good houses for Chicago at that time, too. I have very lively recollections of "what happened to Jones" when we turned on steam, having forgotten to allow for expansion in the feed pipe. Well, we cut a piece off from the pipe and rebuilt the end of the house. I am pretty sure that pipe would have kicked a hole in the side of a brick block, any way, so an iron frame would not have helped much in that difficulty. The supports soon rotted, and as they gave too much shade we replaced them with pipe. The pipe is still there in good condition and will be of use when the houses are gone. Score one for iron!

Having been foolish enough to pipe our first houses with 1-inch pipe, when we came to build again there was a fine collection of second-hand pipe on hand, and we used it for purlins and supports throughout. The result was a stiffer roof and more light in the houses, an improvement over the first, but there was still too much wood at the eaves. Our last house is built with angle iron purlins, pipe supports and angle iron eaves. This is the strongest, lightest and best house we have. Unfortunately we were unable to use iron posts and I can see trouble ahead there.

Up to date, our experience has been the more iron the better the house. Carried to its logical conclusion, this would indicate that modern iron frame construction is the best. Leaving out the question of first cost, there is no one, I fancy, who will not concede this to be the case. Counting in the difference in cost, however, the matter becomes more complicated.

The last house built by us, at a time when glass and iron were at the top price, was 31x125 feet and cost about 39 cents per square foot of ground covered, house complete with piping, but no service shed and no boilers. Figures given me by a friend indicate the cost of a modern iron frame structure erected last summer to have been about 79 cents per square foot of ground covered. Taking the cost of our house at 39 cents per foot we would have annual charges as follows: Depreciation 5 per cent, 1.85 cents; interest at 6 per cent, 2.34 cents; maintenance, 2.40 cents; total, 6.59 cents. On the iron house costing 79 cents, the depreciation at 2 per cent would be 1.56 cents; interest at 6 per cent, 4.68 cents; maintenance, 1.56 cents; total, 7.80 cents, or a difference in favor of our house of 1.21 cents per square foot covered.

In other words, an iron house of the same size would have to pay me about $49 more for the year, to break even. This it would undoubtedly do, and more, but in order to warrant the expense it should do considerably more. As to how much more it would produce, or how much more it should produce to justify its construction, I refuse to state—because I don't know.

My idea is that under present Chicago conditions there is not, in dollars and cents in the bank at the year's end, very much advantage in the best iron frame house over the best type of semi-iron. The general tendency of iron will be down and wood in the future will increase in price, thus increasing from year to year the advantage of the iron house over the other.

A FINE DECORATION.

So many mixed stories have been printed regarding the decorations at the Vanderbilt-French wedding that perhaps those in the craft would like to hear from one who saw them and knows just what was really used.

The entire decorations of church and house were under the direction of Mr. J. H. Troy, manager of the Rosary Flower Co. The church was done in pink and white. Longiflorum lilies were used on the altar and the chancel rail was of lily of the valley and Bridesmaid roses. Palms were grouped on either side of the place for the bridal party and there were other groups of palms about the church. Standards bearing a Gloire de Lorraine begonia were at every other pew. Over the main door was a large horseshoe of lilies and Bridesmaid roses. Southern smilax was much in evidence, eight cases being used.

At the house Mr. O. A. C. Oehmler had charge of the cut flowers and table decorations. The reception hall was done in holly, the four walls and ceiling being covered, and English holly trees were used in groups. The colored liveries showed up well. The library was decorated with Beauties, the yellow room with forsythia and Lady Dorothea roses. The large hall was used to receive in and this was treated with holly, the same as the reception hall. There was a canopy of Bridesmaids and stevia and fancy baskets of Gloire de Lorraine begonias were suspended, making a beautiful pink effect. The small halls leading to the large hall room were decorted with southern smilax and Bridesmaid roses.

The large ball room was a beautiful sight. Wild smilax and hundreds of strings of asparagus were used for green, and poinsettias for color. The large chandelier was heavily draped with asparagus and many poinsettias were effectively placed in same. On the fourteen small tables in the room the same color scheme was carried out, some 450 poinsettias being used.

The main feature of the room, the bridal table, was decorated by Mr. Oehmler personally and it was rather out of the ordinary. The 50-lb. wedding cake was upon a disk of wood upon rollers. The disk was greened up and the design in the icing on the cake was carried out on the green in gardenias and valley. Around this was a piece on hinges and rollers, measuring 6½ feet across, made of 500 Golden Gate roses, and running from this were 18 rays or sprays of orchids and orange blossoms. After the breakfast, Mrs. Vanderbilt pulled a hidden cord and the entire center piece opened, forming a horseshoe. Then by pulling a small silk cord concealed under one of the rays the cake rolled to her to be cut.

Many palms were used about the house and in all six cases of holly and eight of wild smilax were used here. The decorations about the grounds and the beautiful arches of pines were arranged by Mr. Johnston, Mrs. French's private gardener. J. C. N.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

The executive committee of the S. A. F. will meet on Tuesday, March 5, at the Genesee Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., to consider and act upon such plans as may be presented for the society's welfare, to so systematize its work as to confer the greatest possible benefits upon American horticultural industries and to perfect arrangements for the coming convention in the Pan-American city.

Suggestions on the above lines are requested and will be welcomed and given careful consideration by the committee. Communications may be addressed to any member of the executive committee, to your state vice-president or to the secretary's office, 67 Bromfield street, Boston. The members of the executive committee are as follows: Patrick O'Mara, New York, N. Y.; Edmund A. Wood, Natick, Mass.; W. F. Kasting, Buffalo, N. Y.; H. B. Beatty, Oil City, Pa.; W. J. Stewart, Boston, Mass.; C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y.; J. F. Cowell, Buffalo, N. Y.; Lawrence Cotter, Dorchester, Mass.; J. F. Sullivan, Detroit, Mich.; A. B. Cartledge, Philadelphia, Pa.; J. D. Carmody, Evansville, Ind.; Alex. Wallace, New York City; Emil Buettner, Park Ridge, Ill.; and R. Witterstaetter, Sedamsville, O.

All indications point to a continuance of the great wave of prosperity which the national society has enjoyed for the past two years, and from the wide-spread interest already manifested on all sides it is evident that the Buffalo convention will fully equal, if indeed it does not exceed, the record for attendance and membership accessions of the successful Detroit and New York meetings.

President O'Mara has appointed Messrs. Alex. Wallace, New York city; Richard Witterstaetter, Sedamsville, O.; and Emil Buettner, Park Ridge, Ill., members of the executive committee of the S. A. F., to serve for a term of three years from June 1, 1901.

He has also appointed as state vice-presidents and acceptances have been received from the gentlemen named below:

Baumer, A. R., Louisville, Ky.
Blackistone, Z. D., Washington, D. C.
Beard, F. H., Detroit, Mich.

Rose Garden on the estate of Mr. E. D. Adams, Seabright, N. J.

EUROPEAN NOTES.

During a recent trip to the "old sod" my first visit was to the nursery of the old firm of Austin & McAslan, at Cathcart, some miles out of Glasgow. Among things especially noticeable were some fine plants of Adiantum Rochfordi, somewhat coarser than A. cuneatum but evidently a decided improvement upon that variety, and some excellent seedling tuberous begonias and gloxinias. Some hybrid roses in a Glasgow flower store were perfection in shape, color and fragrance, but alas, they lacked stem.

I next made for Findlay's establishment in Bailiston, where there is a large area of glass devoted to tomatoes as well as palms. Though it was the middle of July they had fire heat in their palm houses. They keep their kentias in a night temperature of 55 degrees in winter. All palms are plunged in old horse manure that has been several times overhauled. Was told they preferred cocoa fibre but the other was cheaper. I noted some araucarias in small pots in the process of rooting. They were in a frame built on a bench covered with panes of glass and newspapers and given a gentle heat by hot water pipes. Rubbers are rooted from single eyes in pots without bottom heat. For shade whiting mixed with turpentine and a bit of oil is used.

While in Edinburgh I visited Dickson's and the Botanic Gardens and saw some fine beds of roses containing the following varieties: Prince Camille de Rohan, Mme. Gabriel Luizet, La France, Viscountess Folkestone, Gloire Lyonnaise, A. K. Williams (resembling Jacqueˆ), Mme. E. A. Notte (resembling Soupert and a great bloomer). A Chinese variety called Fabrier, the flowers somewhat darker than Crimson Rambler, was especially noticeable.

From Edinburgh I went to Thomas Rochford's Turnford Hall Nurseries in Broxbourne, some miles out of London, probably one of the largest ranges of glass in the world, and I was told it had grown from a small beginning to its present size in but 14 years. About 300 men are employed. Tomatoes, cucumbers and grapes occupy a large space and whole sections of houses are devoted to one variety of palm, all plunged in cocoa fibre. A house of orchids, the plants hung from plate to ridge and the long white roots hanging, presented a rather stringy appearance. Japan lilies are grown in large quantities and the foreman said they were not profitable if grown in a temperature under 60 degrees. A large stock of Adiantum Rochfordi (previously mentioned) was in evidence. Also eucharis, Pandanus Veitchii, draceenas, cocos, anthuriums, stephanotis, and ferns of all descriptions. One 400-foot house was filled with Bridesmaids and Mermets and a few Liberties. This was the only stock that didn't compare favorably with the American grown article. The roses were planted in the ground, probably no drainage, with several 4-inch hot water pipes running lengthwise about two or three feet above the ground. Out of doors were what seemed acres of chrysanthemums, hydrangeas, hybrid roses, etc., in pots. Everything was in uniformly fine condition.

At the Kew Botanic Gardens I noticed a bed of penstemons and think this would be a useful flower for any garden. A bed of Anthony Waterer spiræa interspersed with eandidum lilies was attractive. Some Aconitum cammarum (var. Stoerkianum) looked as though they might have a market value. The roots of all the species are, however, very poisonous. Clarkia elegans showed up rich in color. Begonias semperflorens rosea and alba make fine bedders here. In the stove houses I noticed some fine specimens of Adiantum æthiopicum and A. Veitchianum, coarse varieties with long stems that might prove a welcome change from asparagus. I saw here a pink petunia called Mrs. F. Sander, the equal of which we have never been able to get in an American collection. Salpiglossis variabilis, a free flowering border plant, caught and held my eye and the most beautiful plant I ever saw was under a bell glass in one of the orchid houses; it was Macodes Petola. Outside, a bed of odd thorny plants were Solanum atropurpureum.

The La France rose takes the lead as a bedder. Mme. Cochet, color somewhat like Mermet, showed strong canes. Souv. de S. A. Prince was a fine white. Viscountess Folkestone and Augustine Guinoisean were fine pink and blush shades. Old Ulrich Brunner and Mrs. John Laing were here in all their glory. Hon. Edith Gifford was the best white seen. Princess de Sagan was a fine dark color and would make an excellent pot plant.

I next went by the way of Harwich to Antwerp, through the land of old Dutch windmills, through Brussels, over miles of level country where women could be seen in the fields with sleeves rolled up making hay. In due season I arrived in Basle, Switzerland, and after a visit to the place of my birth I again looked up sights floricultural. In the public market of this city were florists' stalls and an exceptional feature to me was that made-up designs for funerals were kept on sale awaiting a customer. The design most in evidence was the crescent wreath, the base being in most cases made of laurel leaves. The greenhouses here are mostly small even-span structures.

While in Zurich I visited the establishment of Otto Froebel. A novelty seen here was Franciscea magnifica perfecta, flowers blue and resembling those of a hibiscus. Euphorbia fulgens is grown here and I was told they prefer it to Poinsettia pulcherrima. Some finely colored crotons were grown in a frame exposed to the full sunlight. In the herbaceous garden Tigridia conchiflora made quite a show. It is called "Eintagsblume" in German because the individual flowers last but a day.

In the public gardens of Geneva the beds of tuberous and Vernon begonias eclipsed all else as fine bedding plants.

At the Paris exposition I saw some remarkably fine dracaenas, crotons, etc., and was especially pleased with Kentia australis, Maranta illustris and Pandanus Sanderi. The latter is more variegated than Veitchii and is a grand thing. I also noted a fine lot of Ardisia crenulata grown in a mixture of sand and leaf-mould in 6-inch pots. A bed of Cele-sia gigantea well deserved the name, as the heads of most of them measured a foot lengthwise. I expected a better exhibit of cannas. The following three looked like good ones: Lt. Col. Marchand (resembling Florence Vaughan) Mrs. Dreer and Prof. Bazin. Dracaena Doucettii, a novelty, is a variegated D. indivisa and a fine thing. Among vricas, E. gracilis, a fine pink, and E. monadelpha, appeared to be the best ones.

There was a grand show of dahlias. Among those of the cactus type these appeared to have the preference: Ginevra, Mons. Bouvier, Rossini, Bicolor, Grandiflora rubra, Ariane, Sylvia. Among chrysanthemum dahlias these: Ruby, Cycle, Matchless (dark, elegant), Rey des White, Papa Charmee, Mistress Thornton, Jane Baslan, Starfish, Norfolk Hero. Among singles: Grandiflora alba, Attraction, Étoile de Lyon, Miss Helyett, Papillon, Clematite, Paul Soleilcte, Agathe, Le Lyonnaise and Minos (large, dark, elegant).

I managed to get to Versailles, a suburb of Paris, where there were oceans of flowers in the beds, including calceolarias, white daisies and marigolds.

I would warn members of the trade not to take the rail route from Paris to Dieppe unless they have their lives insured, as the swaying of the railway carriages resembles somewhat the movements of a tight rope walker. After casting my bread upon the waters with liberal impartiality, both when crossing the channel and the briny deep, I arrived safely in the old Bay state with a somewhat depleted treasury but in place of the vanished coin a broader idea of our business and the satisfaction of having been more than seven miles from the smoke of a chimney.

The Market.

The social wheels are revolving faster and faster now. Good stock sells on sight, unless the seller has two exalted an idea of the value of his wares. Roses are still short in supply. Carnations are more plentiful and sell well. Mignonette and violets are in brisk demand. Bulbous flowers are getting more plentiful. Yellow tulips, which were scarce early last week, were in good supply toward the end of the week. Both double and single daffodils have come; this week will find them more plentiful. Valley is not in form now, being devoid of foliage. Asparagus has been rather scarce. Here is a chance for Chester county. This green is easily grown; the sprays said to be most profitable can be grown in low houses and it is a great shipper.

A Visit to W. K. Harris.

William K. Harris' place at 55th and Springfield avenue is always interesting to florists. The stock is well grown and the establishment run in a systematic, business-like way ,that commands success. The proprietor, his son and his foreman, Mark Mills, were all absent, but we were kindly received by a jovial assistant who was in charge; we later found he was an apt pupil of Julius Rochrs.

There were three houses of rubbers, one each of tree, small branching and straight stems; the latter were in fine condition. There was a lot of palms; arecas in a variety of sizes looked well. Then there was a whole house of Pandanus Veitchii, evidently grown in benches and shitted into marketable sized pots. This method saves time, but I think at a loss in character and stamina, which no plant can afford. Boston fern is remarkably well done—better than I have seen it elsewhere. There are some nice Adiantum Farleyense and some original pottery ware, the contents of which the aforesaid disciple prefers not to have mentioned.

Among the flowering plants, genistas were conspicuous; also lilies, apparently Japan longiflorums. There were a few fine bougainvilleas in bloom, and here and there early azaleas nearly ready. Besides the genistas and lilies for Easter, Deutzia gracilis and Crimson Rambler roses were under way.

The bulbous stock made a pretty bit of color. In tulips La Reine was of good size and stem, with that tinge of pink that adds charm to this variety. Yellow Prince had evidently been experiencing a run. A new single purple was of a shade suitable for the royal obsequies but hardly likely to prove a winner. Daffodils, both single and double, were grown in 6-inch pots, the single varieties being very prominent. Valley is not in full crop just now. Phil.

Trade Conditions.

The last week of January proved quite a profitable one generally, both among the growers and the retailers. The exception in order to prove the rule is in the case of the violet men, whose wares are moving more sluggishly. Roses came much more freely, but the demand utilized them all at first-rate prices until the very last day of the week, when the very best grade were obliged to flinch a little. The carnation cut has not increased and is not expected to do so soon. The bulb blossom supply has fallen off 50 per cent with almost enough increase in price to offset the loss, and the same statement is true in regard to lilies on a basis of 25 per cent instead of 50. Of course there are always odds and ends of material coming in and perhaps there is a little more variety in this class of matter just now, but the fact surely remains that New England as a community uses but little variety of cut flowers at any one time of the year.

Perhaps growers of red roses may also think they have a grievance just now since there is but little call for their goods as they cannot so well be used in funeral work. It is almost fortunate for them that there are so few being cut at the present time, else prices would be lower.

Various Items.

John May's son, from Summit, N. J., has been sight seeing in this vicinity. No, American floral conditions are not complete until New England returns are in.

The date of Saturday, March 9, has been fixed upon for the annual carnation exhibit at the Co-operative Market. The committee of arrangements consists of Messrs. Peter Fisher, Wm. Nicholson and Geo. Cartwright, any one of whom may be addressed for particulars. Descriptive circulars will be mailed extensively at the proper time, and it will be a good plan to make sure your address is with the committee. Generous prizes are to be offered.

Probably the most interesting feature to the commercial grower last Saturday in the old hall across the way from the "Old Granary Burial Ground" was M. S. Patten's carnation exhibit. In a discussion about the best grower in New England his name is sure to be mentioned. Of course, the grand Ames' display of orchids could not fail to be of interest, being surely the best I ever saw in my limited experience. The limitless array of camellias was remarkably fine, as were also a dozen of huge Primula obconica from Harvard. Their color was a feature, being a very light lavender. I saw nothing else of special interest, although there was a good collection of flowers, plants and certain vegetables.

Madame de Chateney Rose.

Among the new roses aspiring for favor in this section is the Chateney, which bids fair to outclass all competitors. The few I have seen came from the skilled hand of Robert Miller, manager of the Exeter Rose Conservatories in New Hampshire. They were magnificent to the senses of sight and smell and the claim is strongly made that they will satisfy the commercial instinct just as thoroughly. In size and general makeup the cut flower resembles the largest Bridesmaid with a beautifully shaded petal. Its aroma more nearly resembles that of the Bon Silene. Boston buyers are inquiring about it and have allowed very gratifying pocket-book receipts for the few obtainable so far. It looks like something that will well bear watching.

BUFFALO.

The sharp, freezing weather of late has pleased everybody except the doctors. The health of the community is good, and when that is the case the trade of some florists whose business runs in a certain line is liable not to be so good.

Roses and carnations are a little more plentiful than they were. Violets extremely plentiful. Plenty of Harrisii lilies nowadays, and also fine tulips and narcissus. So there is enough to meet the demand.

We have had several visitors of late, mostly of the drummer order. It's a long time since I have attended to these gentlemen in their official capacity. We just missed Mr. Joseph Rolker by thirty seconds, after several attempts to connect. The leonine face and figure of Mr. Arnold Ringier was very busy here for several days. He believes in doing the town thoroughly. His youthful training in climbing his native Alps has endowed him with a constitution that can stand most any kind of weather or icy sidewalk. Then we have had that much traveled Antipodian, Mr. McHutchison, of New York, who can talk most interestingly of theology, political economy, the Maori of New Zealand, the 400 feet of towering blue gum, or the duck-billed Platibus of Australia, that strange connecting link between the birds and the true mammals.

Perhaps there are a few of your readers unacquainted with this strange creature (I don't mean Mr. Mc.), the existence of which is such a marvelous lesson in the history of evolution. About the size of a muskrat, with a body not unlike it, it has the hair or fur of a rabbit, but instead of a nose the perfect beak or bill of a duck, short legs, with webbed feet; it lays an egg, but suckles its young. And if you want to see this wonderful survival of the dim past you must hunt for him in Australia, where he still exists in life, but a specimen can be seen in the Museum of Natural Sciences of Montreal.

The other connecting link that was here was Mr. Barclay, of New York and Chicago. I call him that because Aberdeen is the connecting link between the Highlands and Lowlands of Scotland. Mr. Barclay is a splendid example of how you can preserve all physical and mental faculties to an advanced age by a simple diet and a virtuous youth.

Unlike most of the cities which are in the front rank as bowlers, our boys have scarcely had a game since New York. But two weeks ago they got together and are now having a game every Thursday night. There were present at the last meeting Messrs. J. Braik, G. Troup, G. McClure, W. Greever, W. Adams, W. F. Kasting, W. Weber, C. Reish, W. B. Scott, D. J. Scott. In four games G. McClure and W. Weber averaged about 180 and Troup and Braik were close up. Your correspondent had to attend a vestry meeting of his church, but he intends to be present hereafter. Some may think it's curious for elderly men to bowl. I think it's fun to see men like John Westcott and Deacon Harris take part in a game with their juniors. Be boys as long as we can. We have all too little recreation in our scramble for existence.

Any misgivings we had about securing a set of alleys good enough for the convention have been set at rest, as we are assured that eight fine alleys are soon to be built in a central location on Main street and will be ready long before Chicago and the rest will visit us to meet their Waterloo. W. S.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business of late has been fairly good but there has been no great rush at any particular time. Good roses are selling well and will no doubt continue doing so until Lent sets in. The first few days of the past week flowers sold well, and the wholesale houses were soon sold out of their stock. Flowers of all kinds are scarce, particularly so with the first-class grades. First-class Beauties are very scarce and bring top prices. Brides, Meteors, Maids and Perles are also scarce and bring as high as $8 for choice grades. Very few are sold below $5.

Carnations are not over plentiful, except Scotts. Daybreak, White Cloud and Crane are fine and choice stock brings $3; ordinary stock, $2; very few are sold at $1.50. Good scarlets seem scarce and are in good demand; whites had the best call the past week.

Bulbous stock also had a good call all week and nothing was left over except a few Romans, which sold at $2, some at $1.50; paper whites, $3; good valley, $4; Von Sion, $4; freesias, $3. A few tulips and Dutch hyacinths are coming in. Harrisii are out of the market and callas are selling well at $15 per 100.

Violets are selling well, the best Californias bringing 40 to 60 cents per 100, 30 cents in 1,000 lots. The few Princess of Wales that come in bring 75 cents. Southern stock is coming in now, but the sale is slow and 20 cents per 100 is about all they bring.

The cut of smilax has been very heavy and will be scarce for some time. The price for fine, large strings is 15 cents, but the average is about $12.50 per 100 strings.

Notes.

F. W. Zachritz, keeper of Grayois Park, died of apoplexy the past week. Mr. Zachritz was the father of Judge William Zachritz, of the Circuit Court of St. Louis, and was well known among the trade.

John M. Hudson is up and around again and is at present selling trees for the Sanders Nursery on Delmar boulevard.

William Bouche, the landscape gardener, is very busy at present making plans for the new Edgemont and Day parks at East St. Louis, Ill.

Frank Gutzman of North Broadway reports that trade with him since the first of the new year has been all that he expected.

Don't forget the club meeting next week. The three essays by Messrs. Weber, Berning and Beneke will be very interesting. The entries for the rose show are very large and the trustees will have everything in readiness at 2 p. m. The meeting will open promptly at 3 o'clock.

The decorations for the high school graduating exercises last week at the Odean building were elaborate. The work was done by George Ostertag and was much admired.

Fred Weber was quite busy the past week with receptions, using on one occasion over 200 Beauties.

George Waldbart has nothing to complain of during the month of January; plenty of good work of all kinds.

Ellis & Tesson, at 625 Olive street, have been having plenty of funeral work of late. This with other work has kept them very busy.

James S. Wilson of Western Springs, Ill., was a visitor this week, and called on his many friends in the trade.

J. W. Canaga, with W. A. Duke, Danville, Ill., was in town Monday, buying supplies and calling on his friends.

Bowling.

The bowling club had a great time Monday night entertaining their old friend, Jim Wilson, of Chicago. Nine members were present and some good scores were made. The last game saw a great finish between Wilson, Kuehn, Beneke and Adels. The scores were as follows:

	1.	2.	3.	Total.	Ave.
C. A. Kuehn.....	167	154	187	508	169
J. J. Beneke.....	165	123	193	481	160

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The supply of roses has increased a trifle during the past week and prices are somewhat easier on medium grades, though there is no change on first quality. On carnations prices are a little lower on poor grades, but the best still hold to former figures. Bulbous stock is in less demand than ever, and of violets there is a serious surplus. Even first class violets are moved with difficulty, and the other kind are practically unsalable at any price.

The principal call is still for white, indicating a continuance of the demand for funeral flowers. Lilies sell well, both Harrisii and callas. General trade conditions continue fair for the season, though the volume of trade will hardly exceed that of last year at same period.

Club Meeting.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club last Friday evening there was a good attendance and the use of iron in greenhouse construction was thoroughly discussed. The two essays that were read at the meeting will be found elsewhere in this issue.

During the discussion, in response to an inquiry, Mr. Jas. Hartshorne thought that it would take an iron frame house three years to pay for itself from its product, while a wooden one would pay for itself in about two years. He thought the semi-iron construction would on the whole pay better on the investment.

Referring to the setting of iron posts in cement, Mr. W. W. Coles, who was a visitor, said he had set wooden posts in this way with very gratifying results. Instead of tamping in the soil the space around the post in the hole was filled with cement, and posts thus set had been as solid as a rock and had lasted longer than others.

Mr. Rudd said red cedar posts were all right, but he would never use another white cedar post in a greenhouse. Mr. Garland said that he thought locust would last the best of any wooden post. Mr. McAdams noted that locust posts were much used in the east. Mr. Broadbeck said locust would last much better in clay than in sand in this section, on account of the sal ammoniac in the latter.

The tenor of the remarks by all the speakers was to the effect that the iron post and iron gutter construction was undoubtedly the thing. Mr. Wittbold said they had had the Garland iron gutter in use for eight years and would not dream of using wooden gutters again, even if they could get them for nothing; and it was brought out that Wietor Bros. had by using the Garland iron gutter and post style of construction in their new range of fifteen houses gained 15,000 square feet of bench surface over what they would have had by following the old style. This they consider was equivalent to giving them 20,000 feet of additional glass as well as permanent houses. They are very enthusiastic regarding this style of construction.

The committee on transportation to the Buffalo convention of the S. A. F. next August was appointed, as follows: G. L. Grant, P. J. Hauswirth, E. F. Winterson.

A committee on the co-operative purchase of coal was appointed and consists of W. N. Rudd, Jno. P. Risch, Peter Reinberg, N. Wietor and Louis Wittbold.

Geo. C. Hartung was elected to membership in the club and before the close of the proceedings Edgar Sanders read some humorous verses on the "Red violet" that were received with much applause.

After the meeting a few adjourned to the bowling alleys, but no 250 scores were made.

Various Items.

Messrs. N. Wietor, Peter Weiland and Luke Collins recently took the now fashionable trip through the Indiana carnation belt. Mr. Weiland was much impressed by the fine new carnations seen at Dorner's, at Lafayette, and was glad to hear Mr. Hill, at Richmond, talk of carnations at 20 cents each in the future. He thought that Dorothy, at Mrs. Graves', Richmond, was as prolific as Scott and a better stem and flower, and believes that Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Evans will be able to raise their baby in the right way, now they have had so many valuable pointers on the care of children from Mr. Wietor. The party saw some fine roses at the South Park Floral Co.'s plant at New Castle, and they were so liberally entertained all along the line that they came home with an excellent opinion of Hoosier hospitality.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

A continued shortage of white stock, especially in roses and carnations, together with an unusual amount of funeral work, was experienced during the most of the past month. Roses were badly off crop and at times it was difficult to fill orders satisfactorily. Paper whites, valley, Romans and violets kept pace with the demand and were used freely to help out when other stock could not be had. Good American Beauties were out of the question, but short, inferior blooms were plentiful. Colored carnations were about the only weak spot on the market at times. Smilax has also shortened up considerably.

In roses, good Maids and Brides ranged at various times from $6 to $10 per 100; seconds from $3 to $4. Carnations—white, $2 to $3; colored ordinary, $1 to $1.50; good fancy sorts, $3 to $5. Violets, fancy, averaged about $1 per 100, with inferior stock moving at any price obtainable. In blooming plants, azaleas, cyclamen, primroses and mignonette predominated, but dealers report sales rather light. C. C. P.

ST. PAUL.

Various Notes.

While business in many other lines has been dull owing to unusual weather conditions, trade in the florist line has been good. Sales for January, the darkest month in the whole year, have been ahead of the average, and have probably never been exceeded. Flowers have been scarce ever since the holidays, and will probably continue so until Lent begins.

The weather has been unusually dark and cloudy, which is not conducive to big cuts. The quality, however, has been fairly good. Beauties have been in good demand and buyers less inclined to grumble about prices than formerly. A few good Libertys are seen and easily lead the Meteor, as their form and color are superior to that favorite. I confidently predict big sales and large plantings of this grand rose another season. If Brother Asmus will only give frequent instructions for the cultivation of this variety, it will soon become popular with the growers.

Carnations have succeeded poorly so far this season, owing no doubt to the unseasonable weather. Violets continue scarce, although there are plenty of buds in sight.

Hyacinths, daffodils and other bulbous stock are appearing and are the welcome harbinger of spring.

We hear of no extensive building here this season, but in Minneapolis the infusion of new blood into the florists' ranks has given a decided impetus to building, and we may soon look for places like Reinberg's in our sister city. Seriously speaking, however, I believe there is a lack of modern built greenhouses in this city and opportunities for selling much more stock than is now grown here. X. Y. Z.

OMAHA.

Various Items.

The demand for cut flowers has been very brisk the last week. Funeral work of every description, from common designs to the more artistic bunches, has, with the demand from other sources, created quite a shortage in the market.

A number of growers are now finding their roses off crop, consequently the tight market is felt by them more than others.

The quality of stock is just what it should be. Maids and Brides are in elegant form, with fine stems. Beauties have suffered some from dark weather.

Prices, wholesale, seem to stiffen a little and indications are that they will go higher. Roses are now bringing from 5 cents, for poor seconds, up to 8 cents for firsts. Carnations have been as scarce as hens' teeth and the demand for same is very sharp. Bulbous stuff is in fair demand and of average quality. Violets are improving considerably, with demand about equal to supply.

A. Donaghue, Jr., is having a new plate glass front put in his store. B.

Michigan City, Ind.—Chas. Kintzele has just completed a new rose house 30x100 feet.

Madison, Wis.—Fred Rentschler has purchased for $4,500 a choice corner lot 132 feet square, on which he will erect 8,000 or 10,000 feet of glass. The houses are to be completed by July 1.

Bellefontaine, O.—The potting shed at the greenhouses of Poole & Purllant was destroyed by fire last week. Fortunately little damage was done to the greenhouses. Loss about $200.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—C. O. Hunt, formerly keeper of the Oxley Zoo, will in a short time open a wholesale and retail flower store in the city, and will be associated with his brother, Frank Hunt, who is at present in the business at St. Louis.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

Meeting of the Tarrytown Hort. Society.

The Tarrytown Horticultural Society held its regular monthly meeting at the Vanderbilt building, January 31st and the newly elected officers were installed. President Smith in addressing the members said that he depended on everyone to help him carry the work and welfare of the society; that though the past two years were very successful in every way, there is still room for improvement. He said in particular, that none of our meetings should be without an exhibit of some kind, plants, flowers or vegetables, and that those members having same, ought to bring them. It would make our meetings more interesting.

F. R. Pierson Co. had on exhibition four plants of the new English variety, white-crested cyclamen "Bush Hill Pioneer," which was greatly admired and to which the society awarded a certificate of merit.

Mr. Wm. Turner, Rockwood Hall, also received the same award for a very fine lot of the following carnations: Mrs. Jas. Dean, Mayor Pingree, G. H. Crane, Marquis, Gen. Gomez and White Cloud. In speaking of them, Mr. Turner made some very interesting remarks, particularly that he grows his carnations in a temperature of 50 degrees at night with 10 to 12 degrees more in day time; that he never syringes them and that with proper ventilation and an even temperature he is never troubled with red spider.

A letter was read from the Dutchess County Historical Society, inviting the members to attend their annual dinner to be held February 12th at the Nelson House, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. President Smith and Secretary Cockburn will attend.

The committee was ordered to make an early preparation of the schedules for the next fall show for which the following dates were selected, November 5th, 6th and 7th.

Messrs. Cooke & McCord offered a prize of $25 for the best collection of vegetables grown from their seed.

Mr. John Whyte, of Scarborough, N. Y., was elected a member of the executive committee, to fill the position of Mr. J. M. Connellon, who has resigned and left Tarrytown.

Two new members were elected, Mr. Dayton C. Belknap and Mr. F. E. Week, both of Tarrytown.

L. A. Martin,
Press Secretary.

A BALL.

The employees of Hitchings & Co., horticultural architects and builders, of New York and Jersey City, announce that their grand annual ball will be held at Columbia Hall, Ocean and Cator avenues, Greenville, Jersey City, on February 18. Judging by the success that attended the preceding balls given by the employees of this company, this should be a very enjoyable occasion, and they wish to extend a hearty invitation to all their friends to participate in same. Music will be furnished by Prof. Beggs' full orchestra.

J. N. McArthur,

NEW GERANIUM LITTLE PINK

Or Double Pink "Mars," one of the best novelties of the Mars family. The first double of this class ever offered to the trade. It is a very dwarf, bushy, compact and extra free blooming variety, not exceeding 4 to 6 inches in height. Its trusses a pleasing shade of bright pink, upper petals white at the base. Unlike Mars or America in color, it has no trace of salmon shading. Its miniature trusses stand erect, 3 to 6 inches above the foliage. It is excellent for bedding, for the border, or as a pot plant. Too much praise cannot be given this grand little pink variety. Price $5.00 per doz., $35.00 per 100. Half-tone cuts will be furnished free of charge for catalogue. Correspondence solicited. Orders booked now for fall and winter delivery. Received certificate of merit at the New York Convention of the Society of American Florists.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

During the past month trade here has been good. Roses have not been over plentiful, but are of excellent quality. Beauties, of which there is a good supply, command good figures. Meteors good; supply not equal to the demand. Carnations are not quite so plentiful as at the holidays, but are good in quality; demand brisk for good stock at from 3 to 4½ cents. Violets showing for a heavy crop in the near future.

The Dunkley Floral Co. are cutting some very fine carnations, particularly Armazindy, which seems to do well in the kind of soil we have here. This place for the past year has been under the management of Mr. M. F. Kyle, formerly of Chicago. Stock both in pots and benches, and indeed, the whole place, shows that it is in charge of a careful and up-to-date grower. In his recent visit to Chicago, Mr. Kyle looked up some of the places where the Liberty rose is grown. He did not see any of it in such a stage as would bear out the high eulogiums bestowed on it last year.

Meteor will be planted in its usual quantity around here this season.

The Van Bochove establishment is looking well as usual. Roses are coming into good crop. Carnations are slightly off at present. Bulbous stock, lilies and valley are plentiful. Funeral work during the month has been heavier than usual. They are earning quite a reputation as designers. Their propagating house is in full blast and from present indications they are likely to turn out some healthy stock.

The rooted cutting epidemic has struck our city. Glad it is not in a very virulent form.

We are in the midst of the worst snow storm of the season, and it looks as if we were going to get some winter after all. "Shoot that ground hog!"

DENVER, COLO.

Trade Conditions.

Trade in January was very good, though dropping off a little socially the latter end. There was, though, an oversupply of funerals, which kept us going. Flowers may be called scarce, the cut on roses being very short and demand good.

Some very fine carnations are to be seen and find ready sale, Marquis being good now, but Lawson is perhaps the best seller. Violets are coming in good, those grown by Benson, of Ft. Logan, being especially good.

Bulbous stuff is quite noticeable, but so far meets with a poor sale. With the society dates all filled ahead, business promises to be good during February.

Mr. Lyle C. Waterbury, for a few years engaged in the growing business at University Park (a new suburb), recently sold out to Young & Brinkert, two industrious young men, who show signs of going ahead, as they have already laid plans for building this spring.

I would like to say something about bowling but have no news, as our club seems broken up and only two or three are to be seen on bowling night. We tried to get Mr. Fotheringham, who recently traveled through here in the interest of the F. R. Pierson Co., into a game. He declined, but would, he said, "go to see a good show." None being in town that week, he in desperation went to church Sunday morning to hear perhaps the best organ in the country. Ask him.

Rocky.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

Meeting of the R. I. Florists' Club.

The annual meeting of the Rhode Island Florists' Club was held at the club room, 96 Westminster street, when the following officers were duly installed for the present year: President, W. Hill; vice-president, M. Sweeney; treasurer, F. McCrea; secretary, A. Rennie; executive and other committee same as last year.

After going through with the usual forms, the brothers and friends adjourned to the supper room, where about thirty did their duty to the good things somewhat outside of their profession. Brother W. Chappel carried out the duty as toastmaster in his usual witty and pleasant manner. During the evening the retiring president, J. Hockey, was presented with a silver-mounted gavel. The evening was spent in the usual florists' manner and the club is going ahead in excellent shape.

There are quite a number of seedling carnations around here and a show is to be held in order to give honor where honor is due.

Prosperity.

Norway

The Queen of Commercial Whites for Carnations.

The modern idea of a commercial variety combines large size with free rapid growth and productiveness, a fine keeper and shipper. It gives us pleasure to offer the white we have all been looking for. A distinct feature is that the flowers are remarkably uniform in size, 3 to 3½ inches in diameter. It is selling rapidly.

Place your order at once.

Price of the above two varieties, $1.50 per doz., $10 per 100, $75 per 1000.

Egypt

A Rich Warm Scarlet Crimson.

A distinct departure from all other crimsons. It has modern commercial stems, long and strong; exquisite spicy odor, beautiful rich glowing color; these are its most distinct features. The flower is large and well formed, 2½ to 3½ inches in diameter. Can be had in good flower by November 1st to 15th. It is a continuous and free bloomer.

Genevieve Lord

The only pink carnation which can claim the proud distinction of having superseded the hitherto invincible William Scott. Genevieve Lord is not only equal to Scott in its palmiest days, but is far superior to that variety in every way. It commands a price that was never obtained for the best Scotts while in their prime. Such a carnation is produced only once in a great while. Place your order early. $5 per 100, $40 per 1000.

WE CAN ALSO FURNISH

PROSPERITY, ROOSEVELT, LORNA and all other 1901 novelties. Also LAWSON, MARQUIS, CROCKER, ESTELLE, OLYMPIA and other new and standard varieties.

SIDNEY LITTLEFIELD, N. Abington, Mass.

FLORIANA
The Best All Round Pink Carnation Ever Introduced.

Large size, fully as large as Marquis or Crocker; color, a beautiful shade of light pink. A strong grower, very fragrant, an early continuous bloomer, very productive, does finely both in winter and summer, good stem, perfect calyx that never splits, not subject to disease, good keeper. Brings fancy prices in New York market. Come and see them. Prices, $1.50 per dozen, $10 per 100, $60 per 1,000. Ready February 1. Fillow & Banks, Westport, Conn.

CARNATIONS—Continued.

NORWAY. The biggest commercial white carnation ever introduced. A business-making, money-making carnation in every sense of the word. It combines large size, length and strength of stem, wonderfully vigorous growth and is a free and continuous bloomer.

EGYPT. Scarlet-crimson and the first really good dark carnation that can boast of first-class commercial stems and a rich, spicy odor. The best keeper of all dark varieties.

Price of the above two varieties, $1.50 per doz., $10.00 per 100, $75.00 per 1,000.

GENEVIEVE LORD. The only pink carnation which can rightfully lay claim to having superseded Scott, and it commands a price beyond tha reach of the best Scotts which ever grew. It is having a great second-year run. Ready now. Price: $5.00 per 100; $40.00 per 1,000.

Prosperity, Roosevelt, Irene, Queen Louise, Dorothy, Lorna, Mermaid and other new varieties at introducers' prices.

EVENDEN BROS., Williamsport, Pa.

RUSSELL. Again this has proved the most prolific and profitable carnation, giving us so far fully 75 per cent more blooms than Crocker and eight other varieties under same conditions. It never splits its calyx, which Crocker and some others do so badly. After five years' trial, under ordinary culture, it has proved the most profitable and best all-around carnation we ever grew. As large as Scott and of a bright shade of light rose-pink. Strong, well-rooted cuttings now ready at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1,000.
Ethel Crocker, $3.00 per 100. McGowan Sport, $1.50 per 100; $10.00 per 1,000.

R. H. MURPHEY & SON, Urbana, Ohio.

Our stock of Everblooming roses, all grown in 4-inch pots, is more extensive and finer than we have ever before offered our customers. All leading popular varieties for sale.
From open ground, we call your attention to our heavy blocks of Gen. Jacqueminot, 2 yrs., strong, own roots, also such valuable climbers as Yellow Rambler, Steigera, Dawson, Climbing Hermosa, Greville, Wichuraiana, etc., etc.
The new climber, Wm. C. Egan, can be supplied in strong one or two-year-old plants at reasonable rates. It is the best of Mr. Dawson's fine hybrids, and is in fact a climbing Malmaison, of the same form and color, and undeniably hardy.
To clear leased land, we offer shrubbery in elegant assortment, at low rates by the thousand. Hoopes Bros. & Thomas, Maple Ave. Nurseries, West Chester, Pa.

Trade Conditions.

Trade since the holidays has been all that could be desired, an important factor being funeral work, which has kept up steadily all winter. Shipping orders have been far in excess of the supply. So scarce are flowers that telegraph orders from new customers are refused, as it is almost impossible to supply regular customers. Roses are off crop and the demand strong. American Beauties, what few there are, are short-stemmed and poor. In carnations, Daybreak and red are the scarcest. The violets are in great supply, also paper whites. Most of them are shipped. Tulips are beginning to come in fine. Harrisii still continue to straggle along in blooming. They have not done satisfactorily, as about 40 per cent of the bulbs were either diseased or failed to start into growth at all.

Prices: Roses, $1 to $1.50 per doz.; carnations, ordinary, 35 to 50 cents per doz., Irenes 75 cents; Harrisii, $2 per doz.; violets, 20 cents per doz.; paper whites and Von Sions, 75 cents, and tulips, 50 cents per doz.

The Baltimore meeting is being agitated somewhat. Those who will probably attend are Henry Smith, Geo. F. Crabb, Chas. Chadwick and Jean Davis. It is to be hoped the weather will be favorable and the meeting well attended. It looks as if no reduced fare was to be had from the railroads. G. F. C.

CATALOGUES RECEIVED.

The Conard & Jones Co., West Grove, Pa., trade list for spring of 1901; North Shore Ferneries, Beverly, Mass., wholesale price list; W. A. Christy, Kinsman, Ohio, descriptive catalogue of "Maple-shade" collection of gladioli; Samuel C. Moon, Morrisville, Pa., ornamental trees, plants, shrubs, vines, etc., and fruit trees and plants; W. W. Wilmore, Dahlia Specialist, Denver, Colo., dahlias, cannas, cacti, etc.; Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., specialties of latest floral novelties; Griffith & Turner Co., No. Paca street, Baltimore, Md., seeds, bulbs, plants, etc.; Nanz & Neuner, Louisville, Ky., plant catalogue for spring 1901; Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, Ohio, Lexington seed annual for 1901.

The Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, have issued a new catalogue descriptive of their improved greenhouse boilers, but appear a host of letters from satisfied users of their boiler and these letters are prefaced by the claim: "First prize awarded by His Majesty the Trade."

The annual catalogue of the Storrs & Harrison Co., Painesville, O., has been issued, and is, as usual, complete, comprehensive and accurate, covering trees, plants, shrubs and seeds. It is a catalogue that recipients invariably preserve for reference.

Los Angeles, Cal.—John Wanamaker, of Philadelphia, has sent an importation to parties here for two to three hundred large rose bushes, ranging from 15 to 50 feet in length, to be used in a decoration of his New York store. They are to cover a space of 20,000 square feet.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—At the annual meeting of the State Horticultural Society recently held in this city, a movement was inaugurated looking to the securing of an adequate appropriation by the legislature for horticultural development in the state. Officers for 1901 were elected as follows: President, H. M. Avery, Sioux Falls; vice-president, A. Norby, Madison; secretary, N. E. Hansen, Brookings; treasurer, M. J. DeWolf, Letcher.

Beeville, Tex.—The South Texas Truck and Fruit Growers' Association held its annual convention here Feb. 5, 6 and 7. The program covered all the phases of truck farming and fruit growing in this state, including twenty-two essays by practical gardeners.

Rochester, N. Y.—The E. R. Fry Florist Co. has been incorporated, with a capital stock of $2,000. The assets are given as at least $7,000, and debts not to exceed $3,447.89.

Monongahela, Pa.—Fire destroyed a storehouse at the greenhouses of I. S. Crall the morning of Jan. 30. It originated from an overheated stove.

Woodhaven, L. I.—Camdon Bros. took to market Jan. 29 the first greenhouse rhubarb sent in by Long Island gardeners this season.

Lander, Wyo.—The Fremont County Hort. Society has been organized with R. H. Hall president, Ed. Farthing vice-president, and Frank Nichols secretary and treasurer.

South Orange, N. J.—Mr. W. A. Manda has been and still is ill with typhoid fever.

Eau Claire, Wis.—W. G. Newell has discontinued business as a florist here.

A "QUARTER CENTURY" CATALOGUE.

The "Quarter Century" edition of the catalogue of Messrs. W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia, has reached us. It contains 220 pages and a most interesting feature to the professional gardener is an outline of the advancement in flowers and vegetables from seed during the last twenty five years. From a typographical standpoint it is remarkable the amount of matter Mr. Burpee manages to print on one page of his catalogue and still avoid the appearance of overcrowding. And the matter, too, is all original and all useful in instructing the reader, as well as presenting the merits of the immense number of varieties of seeds and plants offered. It is a catalogue that will surely be preserved by every recipient. The half-tone engravings from photographs are most satisfying, as well as beautiful and interesting. There are fine colored plates of Burpee's "Quarter Century" tomato, "Caprice" nasturtium, and "Matchless" muskmelon, and many other promising novelties are illustrated and described.

A MOTH CATCHER.

S. A. Hazeltine, Springfield, Mo., has invented a trap for catching the moths that lay the eggs from which are hatched the larvæ that do so much damage to fruit and other trees and shrubs. This seems like going to the root of the trouble and if the trap does what is claimed for it spraying will soon be a relic of the past. It is certainly simpler to kill the moths than the thousands or millions of their offspring, and a vast sight cleaner as well as less expensive than spraying.

Mr. Hazeltine asserts that most of these moths fly at night and the trap consists of a lamp set on a pan and with eight reflecting surfaces set around the light in such a way as to attract the insects to the danger point before they can be warned away by the heat, which last renders ordinary lights only partially effective. The trap is offered at a reasonable price, and if it is anywhere near as effective as claimed by users it will prove invaluable as a destroyer of outdoor insect pests. It might also be useful in the greenhouse under certain conditions.

IRRIGATION.

The subject of irrigation of garden crops is receiving some little attention from the general gardening papers. EVANSTON, ILL., March 26, 1894.
Messrs. Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, Ill.
DEAR SIRS: Replying to your favor, would state that I have in use three of your Improved Green House Boilers, which I have had for five years. Before purchasing yours I had been using the Devine Boiler. I like your boiler better because it has water front and water back, which allows no heat to escape. The saving of coal as compared with other boilers is about one-fourth. Your boiler is easier to run than other boilers.
Yours truly,
M. WEILAND,
Evanston, Ill.

THE GARLAND

Iron Gutter and Iron Post Construction

FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN LAST SUMMER DURING CONSTRUCTION.

BY using the Garland Iron Gutter and Iron Post construction in the above range of six houses, each 26 feet 8 inches wide by 250 feet long, there was made a saving of $1,200.00 over wooden gutter and wooden post construction. The Iron Gutter and Iron Post construction cost $100.00 per house more than wooden gutters and wooden posts, but there was a gain of 750 square feet of available bench surface in each house. This additional bench surface is worth at least 40 cents a square foot, and therefore, a total of $300.00 per house. Deducting from this the $100.00 extra cost of the Iron Gutters and Iron Posts, left a saving of $200.00 on each house over wooden construction. And on the six houses the gain was $1,200.00. This was the saving for the first year. In following years the full $1,800.00 will be saved annually. That the space gained is just as valuable as any other in the house is attested by many of the most noted florists in the country. Aside from the saving noted this range of houses will last indefinitely.

Can you afford to miss this Great Advantage in your next new houses?

CARNATIONS

CARNATION NOTES.

Shading.

You must now look after the shading of your carnation cuttings closely on bright days. The sun is gaining in strength and an hour's neglect may cause the loss of many cuttings. Most of us have a busy time for an hour or two each morning, but you must not neglect the cuttings, for on their health will largely depend your success next season. The whole secret in rooted carnation cuttings lies in keeping them from wilting without causing damping-off from too much spraying. If you see the day is going to be bright spray the cuttings early in the morning and let down the curtains or put on the shading before the sun strikes them. They will then start in the day in good fresh condition and will be better able to stand the warm, dry atmosphere during the day than if the sun is allowed to shine on them and dry them off for an hour, or even a half hour. But in the evening if they are nice and fresh take away the shade and let them have the weak sunshine for an hour to allow some of the dampness on the foliage to evaporate, and to help keep the cutting sturdy.

I do not like to have the foliage damp over night, as it causes rust to start on some varieties, and damping-off is usually started the same way. Keep the sand well saturated with water. Examine the sand in the evening, because it will show better then if it needs watering; but do not water except in the morning. In the morning it will look moist unless it is quite dry, which it should never be from the time the cuttings are put in until they are taken out again. I see that there are some growers who are just commencing to make cuttings and that there are others who have not as yet made any. They will be just that much late next fall when the blooming season opens up. The early bird catches the worm, you know.

Exhibition Blooms.

When you get to Baltimore and see some of those fine blooms on long and strong stems you will be tempted to invest heavily in some of the varieties that "show up" best. But do not let the sight of those fine blooms carry you off your feet. With average weather this is, perhaps, the best time for fine carnation blooms, and a variety is likely to show up now if it ever does.

Such varieties as The Marquis, Empress and Pingree can be had in fine shape at this date and will often show up better than other varieties which are earlier and therefore much more profitable. When McGowan was a novelty it was beaten in New York (I think in March) by a variety named Sea Gull, raised by Mr. Dorner. McGowan is grown today, while Sea Gull was never disseminated on account of its lateness. Jubilee was beaten in this city (Indianapolis) in 1894 by a scarlet seedling of Mr. Hill's, which was never heard from again on account of its lateness, and only a few years ago Flora Hill was beaten by Jack Frost, which nobody grows now. All this happened in February or March, but in December or January not one of these three winners would have been able to compete. So unless you know that a variety blooms early you are not safe in judging it as a commercial variety by the way it is shown at this date.

A plan that I have found to be a good one is to begin with fall shows and notice what varieties are staged in good condition, and then watch them throughout the season, and if the reports are uniformly good you may feel safe in investing in them, providing the colors are what you want. Steer clear of those that are not exhibited until along toward spring. They are usually late varieties, therefore unprofitable.

Is Judging Blooms in February Fair?

The National Carnation Society has done some grand work in helping to improve the carnation and deserves all the encouragement we can offer it; but it seems to me that its present method of awarding certificates in February is not exactly fair. Many an early-blooming and money-making commercial variety fails to gain a certificate because it does not "show up" with some of those large late bloomers that are making their first crop of blooms and are of little commercial value on account of their lateness, fine as their blooms may be in February and March.

The growers have been accepting these certificates as a recommendation from the society as to the value of a variety commercially, which is quite natural, but at the same time it is a great mistake. These certificates merely certify that a variety will produce blooms of a certain quality in February, but that is not, by a long way, saying that it will be profitable to the commercial grower, and after all is said and done, that is what we want to know.

It seems to me that the society could have a committee in each of several large cities to judge seedlings about once each month (say at the regular club meeting) from September or October until June or July—the longer you make the season the better. Score just as you do now and at the end of the season figure up the total and require them to figure up so high in order to gain a certificate, just as you do now.

An early and steady blooming variety that produces blooms of good average quality would be likely to gain a certificate while those very late ones would stand little chance even if they produced ever so fine blooms. A variety like White Cloud, which comes in in fair time and produces extra fine blooms, would score high each time it was shown and would make up what it lost in earliness.

Perhaps this could be improved upon in some ways, but the idea is to get at the earliness and steadiness of a variety as well as the quality of its blooms, and that is what interests the growers, and a certificate gained under those conditions would mean something to us.

NEW CARNATIONS.

We present in this issue engravings from photographs of individual blooms of several new carnations, seedlings grown by Mr. Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.,

Peter Fisher's No. 170. Fine Daybreak Shade deepening to center.

which will be exhibited at Baltimore. The seedlings that have been maturing under the skilful care of the originator of Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson are naturally of great interest to all, and while the engravings show merely the form of the flower, the following descriptions by Mr. Fisher will help to give carnationists an idea of what they are like.

Governor Woleott is pure white in color. The bloom averages three inches and over in diameter, and has a grand form and substance. A fine calyx from which the petals are thrown well out before expanding. The blooms are borne on wiry stems two to three feet in length, which are strong enough to support the flower gracefully. The plant is a healthy grower, free from disease and of almost ideal habit. Altogether, it is a very promising variety. It may be disseminated in 1902. A noticeable feature is the uniformity in the size of the blooms, running from 3 to 3¼ inches in diameter and very seldom under or over that size.

Eastern Star is also pure white. It is a deeply fringed, full flower of fine form, with high built center, but does not burst. The stem is long, wiry and very stiff. Foliage small, like McGowan, permitting the plants to be put closer together in the house than the average, thus saving space. Mr. Fisher has been selling a limited quantity of this variety this season, which has been very rapidly engaged (always ahead of supply) by growers who have seen it, for the past four seasons, which is a pretty good indication of its excellence. It is a grand keeper and altogether a very promising commercial sort.

No. 170 is a pure Daybreak shade, deepening toward the center, which is formed like a rose (with core). A very early, free and continuous bloomer, producing enormous flowers, 3¼ to 4 inches in diameter, on long stems. In size of flower and length of stem this variety surpasses the Lawson (one of its parents) and the habit of plant is the same upright growth.

No. 130 is a white ground penciled with pink; very chaste. A free, vigorous grower and bloomer; 3½-inch flowers on long wiry stems; plant exceedingly healthy and of fine habit.

No. 270 is until the dull days of winter one of the very best pure white sorts. In the dark season the center is marked and shaded with pink; very chaste and a ready seller. The blooms run from 3 to 3½ inches, are of fine form and borne on stiff stems. It is very early and free and promises to be a summer bloomer.

NEW CARNATION NORWAY.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of this fine new white carnation that is being introduced this season by Messrs. H. Weber & Sons, Oakland, Md. It is but fair to state that the blooms shown were cut on a Tuesday and were not photographed until the following Friday, on account of a delay in transit. It is certainly a very promising white carnation. The blooms of this variety sent to the carnation meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club excited general admiration, and the flower scored 92 points, the highest number of any new variety shown.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

The tenth annual meeting of the American Carnation Society will be held in Baltimore, Md., next Thursday and Friday, Feb. 21st and 22nd.

The annual meetings of this society, and particularly the exhibitions of new carnations held in connection with the meetings, have steadily grown in importance and interest to the trade and have become of the greatest value to every grower of carnations, and that takes in almost every florist in the country.

No one in the trade who can possibly get to Baltimore next week should miss this meeting and the accompanying exhibition. A personal examination of the blooms of the new varieties that will be displayed there may mean the making or the saving of a good many dollars to you. While the awards of the judges are of general value, your own experience with sorts displaying certain characteristics of form, color or habit may enable you to much more definitely determine whether it is wise to take up or let alone certain candidates for popular favor. One well known grower puts it thus: "While the flowers on exhibition do not tell me positively what it may pay me to try, they do tell me positively what I want to let alone."

The Baltimore meeting and exhibition will be held in Lehmann's Hall, on Howard street, and the space devoted to the exhibition will be 71x53 feet. The hall will be lighted by electricity, and to avoid all possibility of damage to the flowers from illuminating gas, the gas will be turned off at the street.

In addition to the awards of certificates of merit to new varieties that show an advance over sorts already in commerce there are liberal prizes for well grown blooms of the standard sorts, so if you want to measure your skill as a grower with that of others you may win both glory and cash by entering in some of the general classes. By this means you can either have your position as a first-class grower confirmed by the judgment of leading experts or have your self-confidence toned down a little. Here is your opportunity to enter the tournament and have a friendly tilt with other good men. We print the premium list in full below:

Premiums.

RULES AND REGULATIONS.

First.—All entries must be forwarded so as to reach the secretary, Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa., not later than the Saturday before the meeting (Feb. 16th). Exhibitors from a distance will please note that their entries must reach the secretary Saturday, Feb. 16th, and mail them accordingly. A charge of $1.00 for each entry will be made for those not entered as above requested.

Second.—All entries not staged by 1 p. m. Feb. 21st will be disqualified from any and all competition excepting for "Certificate of Merit."

Third.—All intending exhibitors of carnations who are not members of the society must pay an entrance fee of $2.00, and if competing for any of the prizes, medals or certificates, they must become a member of the society, which costs $2.00 per year.

Fourth.—All exhibits must have the varieties correctly labeled if named sorts or numbered if seedlings, otherwise they will not be eligible to competition in any class.

Fifth.—Exhibitors who are competing should leave their names and addresses with the exhibition manager so that he can prepare a card giving the same, and placing it with their exhibit as soon as the awards are made. Parties exhibiting not for competition are also requested to observe this rule.

Sixth.—The same vase is not allowed to compete for more than one prize.

Notice.—Parties wishing to exhibit plants or flowers other than carnations are requested to write N. F. Hilton, Clifton Park, Baltimore, Md., as early in February as possible for space and information.

Regulations Governing the Competition for Seedlings for the Certificate of Merit.

1st.—The variety must have been bloomed not less than three years.

2d.—Not less than 50 blooms must be shown.

3d.—Exhibitors entering for the certificate are required to pay an entrance fee of $5.00 for each variety so entered. Those varieties entered in the class for preliminary certificate at Buffalo, will be entitled to compete for the certificate upon the payment of $2.00 for each variety entered.

Special.

Two-year-old seedlings can compete for a preliminary certificate by exhibiting twelve blooms and the payment of $2.00 for each variety so entered; this payment entitling them to compete for the certificate at our next exhibition upon the payment of $3 for each variety from this class.

Scale of Points.

The scale to be used for judging all carnations at this exhibition is as follows:

Color	25
Size	20
Calyx	5
Stem	20
Substance	10
Form	15
Fragrance	5
Total	100

To secure a certificate or preliminary certificate a carnation must score 85 or more points.

In the general classes a score of 85 or more will be required to award a carnation first premium. This is made a rule so as to bring and keep our shows up to the highest possible standard.

General Premiums.

In these there are three classes.

Class A. is regardless of variety and uses

CLASS A.

No.	Open to all Varieties.	First Prize.	Second Prize.
1	100 blooms White	$12.00	$ 6.00
2	100 blooms Light Pink	12.00	6.00
3	100 blooms Dark Pink	12.00	6.00
4	100 blooms Scarlet	12.00	6.00
5	100 blooms Crimson	12.00	6.00
6	100 blooms Yellow Variegated	12.00	6.00
7	100 blooms White Variegated	12.00	6.00
8	100 blooms and other color	12.00	6.00

CLASS B

No.		First Prize.	Second Prize.
1	50 blooms White	$6.00	$3.00
2	50 blooms Light Pink	6.00	3.00
3	50 blooms Dark Pink	6.00	3.00
4	50 blooms Scarlet	6.00	3.00

Special Premiums.

CLASS D.

H. Weber & Sons, Oakland, Md., offer $10.00 for the best 100 blooms; $5.00 for the best 50 blooms; $3.00 for the best 25 blooms and $2.00 for the best 12 blooms of Genevieve Lord.

Robert Craig & Son, E. G. Hill & Co. and Albert M. Herr offer jointly $15.00 for the best 100 blooms; $7.50 for the best 50 blooms; $5.00 for the best 25 blooms and $2.50 for the best 12 blooms of Ethel Crocker.

In the above competition no one grower can compete for more than one prize of each variety.

CLASS E.

The Cottage Gardens, Queens, N. Y., offer a silver cup to the value of $25.00, open to all, for the best variegated seedling carnation, with white ground, which has not yet been distributed—judging to be according to the rules of this society.

In competing for this premium each vase contesting shall consist of exactly 24 perfect blooms, 6 buds showing color, and 6 buds half open. By a perfect flower shall be meant one that has not a bursted calyx, has a stiff stem at least 15 inches long, and otherwise reasonable perfect in form. No premium shall be awarded to a variety that possesses a weak neck, that is, one that does not hold the flower reasonably erect. No premium to be awarded to a seedling of the commercial class which shall be inferior to the best variety of its class now in commerce, and no premium to be awarded to a seedling the flower of which shall be less than 2 inches in diameter.

Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass., offers a silver cup valued at $25.00 for the best vase of Mrs. Thos. W. Lawson carnation containing 50 blooms.

Mrs. Bertram Lippincott, through Mr. John Kuhn, Philadelphia, Pa., offers a silver cup valued at $25.00 for the best vase of Mrs. Bertram Lippincott carnation containing 50 blooms.

E. H. Michel, St. Louis, Mo., offers a fine silver cup to the individual or firm making the largest and finest display at this show. This cup is well worth winning, and it is to be hoped that some one grower or firm will make a display worthy of it.

The American Carnation Society offers a fine silver cup for the best arrangement of carnation blooms, with their own or other foliage—no other flowers to be used in the arrangement.

Douglas H. Thomas, Park Commissioner of Baltimore, offers a cash prize of $25.00 for the best unnamed seedling raised in Baltimore, to be exhibited at this show.

The Lawson Medal.

A gold medal will be awarded for the best vase of 100 blooms, any variety or any color. Medal valued at $60.00.

A silver medal will be awarded for the best vase of 25 blooms of a seedling carnation undisseminated.

A bronze medal will be awarded for the best 12 blooms of any seedling carnation undisseminated.

The program for the meetings of the society include a paper upon "The Carnation in Health and Disease," by Prof. Albert F. Woods, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, illustrated by stereopticon views, and a paper on "Hybridizing the Carnation," by Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass. There will be discussions upon "stem rot," "sub-watering" and other subjects of interest. The question box will be a prominent feature and questions deposited in same will be answered by those present having had experience in the matter inquired about.

The society is a very live body, doing splendid work for the advancement of the best interests of the profession. We present in this issue portraits of the president, vice-president and secretary for the current year. The treasurer was unfortunately unable to supply an up-to-date photograph in time for this issue. The president and vice-president are both Baltimore men and they will both be active as hosts as well as officers of the society and they will be ably assisted by the Baltimore craftsmen in general. We present herewith portraits of a few of the active spirits in the trade, so you may feel in a measure acquainted in advance with some of your hosts of next week.

The social feature is always prominent at the meetings of this society, and as the meeting is this year to be held in a southern city famed for its hospitality, it is certain that all who attend will be made to feel thoroughly at home.

Baltimore Hotels.

The headquarters will be at the Rennert, Saratoga and Liberty streets, the rates on the European plan being $1.50 to $2.00 per day. Other hotels are: Eutaw (American), Eutaw and Baltimore streets, $2.50 to $3.00 a day; Carrolton (Am.), Light, near Baltimore, $2.50 to $3.00; Ganzhorn, Am. $2.00 and Eu. $1.00; Lexington, Am. $2.00 and Eu. $1.00; St. James (Am.), $2.00 to $2.50 (choice and central); Altamont (Am.), $2.50.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Smilax.

Smilax is not so important as it was some years ago and yet it is always found a use for, and those who do a retail business at their greenhouses are put to a good deal of bother unless they have it on their place. It might have been sown a few weeks ago and it isn't too late now. I believe in replanting every season, or at the very least every other season. The flats will not hurt beneath a warm bench for the first month after sowing, as the little plants will be very small, but after that they want the full daylight.

If you grow smilax at all, grow it profitably, and one of the most essential points is to get a good stocky plant by the end of June. As soon as the plants are large enough to handle they should go into 2-inch and by May 1 be shifted into 3-inch. They always make a feeble first attempt at making strings, and this they should do in the 3-inch pot. Then when they are put into the bed early in July the first growth is strong enough to make a good string that can be cut by October 1.

Many plant their smilax in too cool a house and then it is by no means profitable; 60 degrees at night is the lowest it ought to be. Don't think for a moment that smilax grown in a cool house is more hardy and durable. That grown in a high temperature ripens the growth better. I have tried several textures of soil. The worst result was with a light sandy loam and the best with a very heavy clay loam with at least a fourth of animal manure.

Dahlias.

There seems to be a great interest in dahlias nowadays, and when well grown they are a grandly decorative plant, but except for some large decorations they will never be popular as cut flowers. It is as a border plant or in a bed in very large grounds that the dahlia is at home. In a visit to Montreal last summer, during the early part of August, I saw dahlias 8 feet high and crowned with handsome flowers. I said: "You must have kept these well watered." "Watered! Why, we have been flooded with rain since spring." It is not always so with us. Seldom there is rain enough during the summer months to grow dahlias anything like satisfactorily, and if you can't water it is not much use trying to grow them.

The single are often raised from seed, which can be sown now and will make good flowering plants this summer. The single make very showy beds and are preferred by many for the purpose. The named varieties of all the types must, of course, be propagated either from divisions of the tubers or cuttings from them. Early planting of dahlias is not favored by the fanciers. They claim that they are liable to get stunted in July, and many of the expert growers do not plant till the first or second week of July. Dahlia roots can be kept beneath a cool bench. The cooler the better, so long as there is no danger of actual frost. A warm, dry place is not suitable, because the tubers shrink.

Where the supply of old stools is abundant they are sometimes just replanted, or the tubers can be divided and potted, making sure there is an eye to make a growth. If you want to increase your stock, then the propagation is quite simple. Spread an inch of earth on a bench where the temperature of the house is not less than 50 degrees at night and then throw on some more soil, just about enough to cover the tubers. From around the base of the old stalk you will get lots of young growth, and when they have made a growth of three or four inches or two or three joints, they can be cut off close to the tubers. Always make the cutting close below the joint.

These cuttings will root in any bed of sand that is kept at 60 degrees, and should be potted off as soon as the young roots start, but a still better way is to pot the cutting in a 2-inch and plunge the pots in a warm bed. They will very quickly and sometimes fatally if exposed to sun or draughts or dryness. It is perhaps too early to begin operations yet. If you start the middle of March you will be able to get good plants in plenty of time. The dahlia delights in cool weather, yet it will not endure the slightest frost and can never be planted out until all danger is over.

There is a favorite plant which every mixed garden asks for—the lemon verbena. Plants that were grown in pots never be given below 60 degrees. They are also much troubled with red spider, but that is easily kept off by the syringe.

VIOLETS.

We have found it somewhat difficult this year to keep our violets just as we wish to have them, owing to the changeable and, up to the past week, open weather. In fact, it has been so warm that it has been impossible to prevent the plants from starting their soft spring growth, which we always try to avoid and put off as long as we possibly can. This cold weather, while it is death to the coal bin, is just what we need for the plants.

Your care must not be relaxed if you expect to have good blooms for Easter, which comes this year on April 7. A good deal of time must be spent clearing off the old yellow and decaying leaves, which will do much mischief if left, especially if the man at the hose is at all careless. There is a great difference in people in doing this work, some cleaning the plants rapidly, carefully and not hooking off the buds or cracking the stems of the good leaves, while others never seem to be able to acquire the knack of doing it.

It is also time to be removing the runners which you wish for stock for next season, and it is to be supposed that you have the plants marked that you consider especially good as to size and color of flower, length of stem and habit of plant. I think you can see a marked difference in a few years' time where you use care in selecting your stock plants in this way. In fact, we have found it rather hard the past two seasons to get as much stock as we wished, owing to the fact that the plants do not give us nearly as many runners as formerly, which is a good fault when you want flowers (which I suppose is what every grower is after), but otherwise when you want a lot of stock.

last summer and have been resting beneath a cool bench should be started at once. Often the weak growth will have dried up. Cut back to the live, solid wood, shake out and repot and put into a warm house. Keep syringed whenever you pass with the hose and you will soon have any amount of young growths which root quickly and easily. I have often heard people say that they are difficult cuttings to root. We never find them so, but they must be kept continually moist and shaded from the sun like most other cuttings.

Though a long way ahead of time, I will just say here that there is no place like a hot-bed to produce fine, bushy little plants of this sweet-smelling favorite. A plant shifted into a 3-inch pot and put into a mild hot-bed at end of April will make a splendid plant in a few weeks.

Lantanas.

The lantana is another good, useful plant that needs about the same treatment, except that they don't need a hot-bed. Pot-grown plants that have been resting (but not dried up) should be started now in a temperature of 60 degrees. These will soon give you plenty of cuttings which root very readily.

Bouvardias.

Bouvardias are little grown now; still they are most beautiful flowers and well worth growing. Now is a good time to propagate. They can be rooted from the young, tender growths, but it is a slow job and not worth trying, because they root so easily from pieces of the root. When you shake out the old plant to cut up the roots, don't use the stout pieces of root near the stem nor the thread-like roots at the extremity. Take the medium-sized fresh roots. Cut them into pieces ½ to ¾ inch long and distribute them evenly in the sand of the propagating bed. The warmer the sand the quicker you will see the little plants spring up. Cover the roots an eighth of an inch, or just out of sight, and keep moderately moist. You will soon have all the young plants you need. When they have formed a bunch of their fine roots, lift and pot. There is no difficulty about bringing the plants along, but remember that the bouvardia is a tropical plant and should Albert M. Herr, Secretary American Carnation Society.

While on the question of stock, we find it very hard work to get stock that is nearly as good as our own. We have to grow it several years before we get it where we want it, if it is good enough to keep at all the second season. And while I used to think it advisable to get at least part new stock every year, I begin to doubt the advisability of it for the above reasons. R. E. Shuphelt.

BUFFALO.

When we have cold weather, by all means let us have snow. And we have snow—everywhere. It is salvation to our herbaceous plants and winter wheat, that great cereal of the eastern farmer.

Business keeps up fairly well and the supply of flowers is not overdone. There will be no lack of violets for Valentine's Day, and something is necessary to keep the blue look off the beds.

It seems the planting of tulips must have been much smaller than in former years, for there are not any going to waste; in fact, hardly enough for the demand. Although there would be no warrant to grow any such quantity as we did ten years ago, yet the love of these gay flowers is by no means dead, and the fashion in flowers is not so fickle as it used to be, and these spring flowers are welcome as old friends whom we have not met for months.

I was down in Hartford, Conn., last week on a flying trip to attend the Connecticut Pomological Society. There was a decided evidence of pork and beans in this typical New England town, but also a most decided evidence of thrift and wealth, grand buildings and well-dressed people. I could not talk Northern Spy apple or Crawford peach or the "yellows," or fire blight or San Jose scale—in fact, it was difficult to talk of anything after the audience had listened to the brilliant and witty Mr. Hale, who among fruit growers of this country is a colossus. But I had the privilege of telling them of the beauties of the Pan-American in general.

From present appearances there will be at least four of us to attend the convention in Baltimore. I do hope those Baltimore men are not outdoing themselves to surpass anything that has previously been attempted at a carnation convention, but from what we can hear there is no doubt there will be a great show and an enjoyable time. Wm. F. Kasting, Charles Guenther, Wm. J. Palmer and your correspondent will be there, and possibly one or two others who have not yet made up their minds.

Visitors in town of late have been Mr. King and Charles Vick, of Rochester, and Mr. S. S. Skidelsky, of Philadelphia.

The most important event among the florists of late has been the changing of location of Mr. W. A. Adams' icebox. It used to stand against a side wall, and although an up-to-date affair, you had to turn your head to look at it. Now it stands right across the store two-thirds back of the depth of the store. There it is, directly you enter the store, to dazzle your eyes, and its contents must be seen. This, however, is only one advantage. Behind it is a grand place for drummers, advertising agents, "friendly calls," and other unprofitable people to hide behind when good customers enter to buy. Hide deadheads behind an icebox, but let your goods shine out. A very successful M. D. of my neighborhood who rides round in the most luxurious of carriages and has a different one for every day in the week says: "Wash all you have got and hang out all your wash." W. S.

BALTIMORE.

Trade Notes.

For the seven days preceding this writing (Feb. 11) we have had more wintry weather than previously experienced in any one week of this season, the record including snow, a driving storm of hail and sleet, a fall of temperature to about

Chas. L. Seybold, Supt. Patterson Park, Baltimore.

6 degrees, high winds and much cloudiness.

Trade continues good, and flowers in larger supply, but not yet abundant. There is not manifest, so far, any great improvement in quality, but prices are well maintained. Short Beauties abound, Edwin A. Seidewitz, Chairman Committee of Arrangements for Baltimore Convention.

but some fine flowers are also coming in, Andrew Anderson being at the head of the procession of producers of this variety. Akehurst & Son are shipping a new carnation of their own raising; very showy and handsome, a dark crimson with purplish shade, of good size and long stem. Frederick C. Bauer and Cook Bros. are sending to market extra fine mignonette. Smilax comes in in excess of requirements of the trade, and shippers from a distance, of whom there are several, cannot find it remunerative.

A very handsome dinner decoration was arranged on Wednesday for Mrs. Perrin by William J. Halliday. American Beauties were used in loose, artistic arrangements in the halls and drawing room, and in the dining room the round table, seating sixteen, had a magnificent center-piece of rock crystal, filled with long-stemmed Golden Gate roses, with natural foliage instead of asparagus or other greens, the disposition of the flowers being such that no obstruction of view resulted. On St. Valentine's day the same lady gives a dinner where Liberty roses will be the main floral adornment.

John Cook has a handsome decoration for Mrs. Robert Garrett's musicale this week, in which large quantities of roses, of varying hues, according to the color scheme of the different rooms, will be employed. The week preceding Lent is marked for many social events, and the florists will, of course, profit thereby. Just now it seems largely a question where suitable material is to come from.

The Carnation Meeting.

Enthusiasm increases in the approaching carnation meeting and show, the general public seeming to share in the interest which prevails. The various committees having the arrangements in charge are using every effort possible to make the exhibition the main feature. The daily papers of the city are alive to the occasion and may be depended upon to give copious reports of the exhibits, discussions and papers. One of large circulation will devote an entire page to illustrations and accounts of the exhibits and proceedings. If a fine display of blooms is not forthcoming after being so much heralded in advance, it will be greatly deplored, as this show is counted on as a potent factor in developing a taste for fine carnations. From such information as has reached those in charge it is believed the number and quality of the flowers will not be behind former meetings.

The banquet to the society will be held in the same hall with the show, and it is hoped to be an agreeable incident of the meeting.

A number of society ladies are showing a lively interest in the display. Amongst others, Mrs. T. Harrison Garrett, who will make a fine show of orchids and stove plants, which will contribute markedly to the extent and appearance of the exhibition.

A ladies' auxiliary committee has been selected to look after the comfort of any ladies who may attend the meeting. RIX.

NEW YORK.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Club, held on Monday night last, was well attended and enthusiastic. The by-laws were changed, empowering the president to appoint a nominating committee of seven, whose duty it shall be to pick out material best suited to manage the club; there was quite a discussion over the matter, which was settled by a decisive vote in favor of the above.

The several committees reported progress. Mr. Withers read the schedule to be offered for the Madison Square Garden show, and the exhibition committee were instructed to proceed with the printing and distribution of them as soon as possible. Messrs. May, E. Dailledouze and O'Mara were appointed a committee to confer with the Chrysanthemum Society at the Baltimore meeting in regard to that body taking part in the New York show. Secretary Young and Treasurer Weathered announced that the medals and certificates in connection with the convention exhibition had been all sent out. The essay and entertainment committee reported that preparations were being made to have an exhibition of roses at the next regular meeting.

N. F. Flitton, Vice-President Baltimore Florists' Club.

The ways and means committee will meet at the rooms on the night of Feb. 25. Messrs. O'Mara, Burns and May were appointed a legislative committee to watch the interests of the florists' trade in the proposed drastic laws on interstate infection.

Mr. John H. Taylor read a very interesting paper on carnations, and the discussion which followed elicited much information. Mr. May gave his experiences with several of the introductions of 1900; Marquis was good but not early enough in his section; Ethel Crocker was very fine. E. Dailledouze, on being asked to give his opinion, said he knew nothing —he was there to learn. Mr. Taylor exhibited vases of very fine Scotts and Gomez; the Scotts were never planted outside but were put in the benches from the propagating house in May and commenced flowering the latter part of July, and kept on giving splendid results ever since. In answer to a query from Mr. Dailledouze, Mr. Taylor said Scotts grown indoors all the time gave a larger proportion and better blooms than those grown for a time outside; he also stated that Gomez was one of the best sellers with him this season.

There was quite an interesting exhibition of carnations in the rooms, and the judges, Messrs. Birnie, Woerner, Schweinfurth and P. Dailledouze, awarded them the following number of points on the rules adopted by the American Carnation Society: Laura C. Sherwood, a striped variety grown by E. R. Sherwood, Norwalk, Conn., 76 points; No. 2,972, a very large white, 85 points; No. 4,112, brilliant cerise pink, 75 points; No. 2,209, a bright illuminated pink, by far the greatest novelty shown, got 89 points; Maid of Honor, a light pink, 78 points; the above four varieties were shown by John N. May.

Willard F. Jagger, of Westhampton, L. I., showed a large white marked No. 1, which got 86 points, and a dark pink marked 4 that won 80 points. A. Rasmussen, New Albany, Ind., sent one called Hoosier Maid, which received 84 points. H. Weber & Son, Oakland, Md., exhibited Norway, a very large white, which got 87 points, and Egypt, a dark crimson, 74 points.

Mr. May showed a vase of very fine Olympias. Ed. Weimar, Mt. Vernon, N. Y., seven seedlings, among which were several of great promise. The committee reported there was not enough of each to judge by. This was also the case with Henry Kindsgrab's new white. Dailledouze Bros. exhibited an immense vase of magnificent blooms of Prosperity. These blooms were wonders and easily outshone all the other varieties shown. A variety called Cressbrook, sent by C. Warburton, Fall River, Mass., on Saturday, was still in fair condition.

The first annual old-fashioned beefsteak dinner given by the Florists' Club in their rooms on the night of Feb. 9, at which some seventy of the boys took part, was a great success, and much credit is due the committee. W. R. Smith, of Washington, was present, and was as young as the rest.

Trade Conditions.

A very few words cover the whole ground. The crop along all lines has been slowly increasing and rapidly doing so in the case of roses and violets, particularly single violets. There has, however, been demand enough to use up everything at fair prices, except what may be called "No. 1" roses. There are enough of the grade usually termed "extra" to supply the demand for good roses, and enough of the smaller sizes to fill the demand for funeral work and bouquets. Best grades are bringing from $2 to $2.50 per dozen, leaving a supply on hand that should sell at from $1 to $1.50 per dozen, since $4 to $6 per 100 is all the buyers wish to pay for "working" roses. Light colored carnations still remain rather scarce, good ones going at $3 and $4, and equally good Scotts and Joosts selling at $2 and $3.

Fred'k G. Burger, Treasurer Baltimore Florists' Club.

The term "bulbous goods" means more than at any other time so far during the present century, being represented now by Roman and Dutch hyacinths, freesias, jonquils, paper whites and tulips. Valley, too, is beginning to look up a bit. But prices are fairly good on all these lines and the whole cut has moved so far.

Various Notes.

For one thing, a man who has so many goods to sell as I have will not take much time to look up news items, even if he has no more conscience than I am laden with. News is "off crop," too. But all the local stand-bys know that Paul E. Richwagen, one of our best liked young growers, went out to Needham a year ago and leased a plot of land with 16,000 feet of glass, a large, old-fashioned colonial mansion and out-buildings. Sunday morning one of his children awakened him at 3 o'clock calling for water and he found the house so thoroughly in flames that the inmates, ten in all, barely escaped in their night clothes. Paul was fairly well insured on his household goods, so if there is no hitch in settlement he will not lose very heavily, as the flames were confined to the dwelling house of which a good, clean job was made. PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There are many occasions which raise the spirits of some of us to a high pitch—when a new greenhouse, a marble-tiled icebox or a trip across the great big pond seem within easy reach. There are just three occasions when the spirits of all of us, great and small, soar so high. They are at Easter, at Christmas, and during the pre-Lenten rush. We are now in the thick of the gaieties that are so closely crowded together just before Lent.

The market is buoyant. A well known retailer aptly described mid-winter conditions by saying that the people who bought flowers then did so because they wanted them and not because they were cheap. They are not cheap now. Beauties of the special grade, large, perfect blooms borne erect on four-foot stems, bring $9 a dozen. They are very, very scarce. Medium grades bring from $4 to $7.50 a dozen; short stems, $2 to $3 a dozen. The purchasing power of $2.50 was on one occasion lately only equal to one dozen Beauties actually blue from age or cold, and with only twelve-inch stems. Such stories are too sad and I refrain.

Brides and Bridesmaids of first quality bring $12 a 100, a few $15, but more $8 and $10; they are now fine and sell well. Carnations are coming in in great shape; $2 to $4 a 100 is the price for "good ordinaries." White is in brisk demand and in the hands of the skillful manipulator bring a cent more for each bloom than the colored sorts, at least once during the week. Violets continued rather quiet; $1 a 100 was a good price for doubles; many changed hands at lower figures; for singles 35 to 50 cents a 100 was asked.

Tulips are in their glory now. Besides the standard sorts, which can be had in quantity, several fancy varieties are seen in limited numbers, adding a wealth of rich color. Very few red tulips are in the market; various shades of pink and white are most plentiful; yellow and variegated complete the list. Price $3 to $4 a 100. Daffodils, both double and single, are improving. Good Von Sion, such as were seen here five or six years ago, are, however, missing. They brought $6 and even $8 a 100 then, and were worth it. Now they are smaller, and the growers say less reliable; $4 a 100 is the price. Single daffs bring the same figure and a larger sort $5.

Freesia is on the wane, though not scarce yet. It is gotten up in fine shape, large florets with wondrous stems that bear their fragrant blossoms proudly erect. Valley is improving and selling well. Greens are scarce, smilax and asparagus being pretty well cut out; the demand is brisk.

The events of the week were the mid-winter and several other balls, including one given by the married ladies. The club meeting was held on Tuesday. Charles W. Cox read a paper on ferns for ferneries, giving the best varieties for the purpose. Phil.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The supply of roses has increased somewhat and prices are a little easier, first-class teas going at $6 to $8 with only an occasional sale of a few special selects at as high as $10. Of the lower grades the supply is large and prices grade down to almost nothing. Good ordinary carnations range from $1 to $1.50 with fancies at $3. We hear of some sales of extra fancy at $4, but the majority report $3 as top price obtainable. And of poor stock sales are made as low as 75 cents. There is a considerable increase in the number of poor grade carnations in the market.

There is an abundant supply of bulbous flowers and they move slowly. The finest tulips bring $4 and poor ones in job lots range from $3 a hundred down to $1 a barrel, according to one dealer. Daffodils, paper whites and Roman hyacinths move very slowly.

The shipping trade is the backbone of the market, local call being unpleasantly light for the season and not nearly equal to last year at the same period.

There is some complaint regarding delay in shipments of cut flowers, due to the heavy snow storm, and some losses have resulted.

Violets are still in the dumps, and prices on any except the very best depend upon the sort of an offer the dealer can get. One wholesaler holds out a ray of hope for the violet grower by expressing the belief that the violet will be in as good demand as ever when weather conditions permit the wearing of violets on the street.

Klehm's novelty tulips are arriving at Kennicott's and they are strictly first-class.

Various Items.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club tomorrow (Friday) evening a paper is expected from Mr. E. Buettner on growing mignonette, and one from Edwin Kanst on the best bedding geraniums.

The recent heavy fall of snow has caused growers considerable trouble and expense. Some have had to have gangs of men dig out the snow that accumulated between connected houses. Bassett & Washburn fitted their coal wagons with bob sleds and have made the haul much easier in that way.

McKellar & Winterson have put in a stock of cloth artificial flowers and plants which are now largely used by window trimmers. They are also having new signs made for the front of their store.

There was an inquiry in the market last Tuesday for "tame" smilax.

Wm. Hagemann, of Hagemann & Meyer, New York, was a recent visitor.

Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Bassett are at Palm Beach, Fla., and Mr. B. reports that the thermometer registers 90 degrees in the shade there.

John Zech was unfortunate enough to be laid up again last week. He has certainly had more than his share this winter.

Chicago to Baltimore.

A number of those expecting to attend the Baltimore convention of the American Carnation Society next Thursday and Friday have arranged to take the train leaving Chicago at 11:45 p. m. Tuesday, Feb. 19, on the Pennsylvania railroad, which arrives at Baltimore at 6:35 a. m. Thursday. The fare is $17.50 each way.

Any one in the trade desiring to join the party is cordially invited to do so. Berths may be reserved by addressing the ticket agent of the Pennsylvania Lines, 248 South Clark street, Chicago. Those who have already reserved berths are N. Wietor, Jas. Hart-horne and G. L. Grant.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business has been quite brisk the past week. There was not any great scarcity of stock, yet it moved quite lively. Really first-class roses are very scarce and the commission men complain that orders have to be filled with second-class stock. Shipping orders have been coming in heavily the past week, which are promptly filled by our commission men.

The weather has been most favorable. This morning (Monday) we are having a fall of the "beautiful."

Prices opened this week a little higher. The standard varieties in roses, such as Brides, Meteors, Maids and Perles are from $5 to $8. Beauties keep scarce at $4 per doz. for the best, and from that down to $1 for short-stemmed ones.

Carnations keep coming better all the time and some extra fancy stock, which brings $3, is seen at the commission houses. The standard varieties are $2.50 and $2 per 100. Daybreak, Scott and all white have the best call at present.

Bulbous stock was better the past week. Romans are becoming a glut and are selling as low as $1.50 per 100; freesias $2, but not overplentiful; daffodils, $3; tulips are going slowly; Harrisiis have made their appearance and sell at $2 per doz.; callas, $10 and $15; valley always in demand at $4 for the best.

Violets are about the same as reported last week, only not so plentiful; price remains the same. The same can be said of smilax.

Various Notes.

Complaint was made the past week by owners of lots in Calvary Cemetery that metal wreaths and floral emblems which were placed on graves were removed at once without notice to owners. In an interview with Mr. George V. Emory, secretary of the Calvary Cemetery Association, he said: "The rules of the association prohibit placing decorations on the graves, and hereafter they will all be removed at once without notice."

By request a bill was introduced last week in the city council to authorize the park commissioner to designate certain boulevards and avenues on which trees shall be planted. The bill stipulates that the park commissioner may specify in October of each year the districts in which trees shall be planted the following year. In order that, so far as possible, different species of trees may be planted, the commissioner is to have the power of selection for each district. He shall also state how far apart trees shall be planted and in general shall supervise the work. Persons who may be engaged to do the planting will have to obtain from him a certificate of competency. Moreover, he shall give advice and directions looking to the preservation and the protection of the trees.

Prof. Trelease lectured on "A Botanist's impressions of Mexico" last Friday before the Washington University Association.

Will Hucke, of Belleville, is sending a fine lot of carnations to this market every day. His Flora Hills are exceptionally fine.

Joe Heiml, of Jacksonville, Ill., is sending in some fine roses. A few of his Golden Gates this week had 54-inch stems.

Winfried Whiteman, with Frank Ellis, was all smiles last week. It's a girl and Whit is receiving congratulations every day.

Joe Rolker, of New York, is a visitor, calling on the trade with supplies of all kinds.

On March 1 Fred Foster will move from 8th and Olive to 1000 Olive street.

The Jos. F. Dickmann Seed Co. have changed the style of the firm to Dickmann-Dusard Seed Co. They will do business at the same old stand.

E. W. Guy, Henry Emundt and Dr. Halstedt, all of Belleville, are shipping first-class stock of all kinds to this market.

Sanders Nursery, of this city, captured three out of the four orders for trees and shrubs for the water department for the new Chain of Rocks Park, amounting to $800. The other order went to J. K. Derker, agent for Augustine & Co., Normal, Ill. J. J. B.

NEW CARNATIONS.

Registered with the American Carnation Society.

By L. E. Marquisee, Syracuse, N. Y.—"The Empire State." Color, pure white; size, three to four inches; calyx perfect; stem strong, two to three feet; substance exceptionally good; form, full double and well built up and very fragrant. Habit, ideal, making only flowering wood; growth vigorous and quick. Free as a carnation can be, early and continuous.

By W. S. Nichol, Barrington Center, R. I.—"Wild Rose." Color, pure pink, of a clear wild rose color. Very early, free and continuous bloomer. Habit of plant compact and upright, with strong, stiff stems and perfect calyx. Flowers two and three-quarters to three inches, and one of the greatest producers of any commercial variety grown.

By John Kuhns, Philadelphia, Pa.—"John Habermehl." Color, dark pink or red; a good sized flower on a good stiff stem, and with a calyx that does not burst. Habit of plant all that could be desired and an early, free and continuous bloomer.

By Frederick Specht, Rochester, N. Y.—"Mrs. Margaretha Behn." Color, a beautiful light pink; flower of good size with a good calyx and a stiff, strong and long stem. "Miss Meta Behn." Color, light pink; large flower on a long and stiff stem and with a perfect calyx. "Miss Flora Specht." Color, bright red or scarlet; a good big flower and a very strong stem and a non-bursting calyx.

Do not forget the meeting at Baltimore, Md., Feb. 21st.

ALBERT M. HERR, Secretary.
Lancaster, Pa.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.—At the meeting of the Amateur Horticultural Society, Feb. 1, Mr. H. F. Burt, of Taunton, delivered a very interesting and instructive address upon the dahlia, speaking for two hours upon its history and cultivation. Last fall Mr. Burt had a fine display at one of the meetings of the society and the members desired to hear from him as to methods of culture, etc. Previous to the lecture a short musical program was furnished. Rev. W. T. Hutchins will speak at the meeting of the society to be held in March.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The House Judiciary Committee has ordered a favorable report on the bill to incorporate the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists.

HELENA, MONT.—Chas. O. Horn reports business as good and that he can hardly supply the demand. The state legislature is in session here for two months, which makes trade lively.

GOVERNMENT FLOWERS.

According to the Washington Mirror, the government has gone into the business of giving away flowers as well as seeds. The following appeared in the Mirror of Jan. 26 last:

Col. Theodore A. Bingham, in charge of the public buildings and grounds, should be a very popular man, and the florists of Washington have good cause to know the reason why. The hothouses of the government supply the houses of cabinet ministers, senators, representatives and many other favored people without authority of law, and entirely at the good pleasure of the amiable Colonel Bingham. Baskets of the rarest flowers, bearing the gallant colonel's private card, are sent to grace the dinner tables, the receptions, the weddings, and even the funerals, of his favored friends. And the kind, good, easy-going American people pay the bill. Nobody kicks but the florists, whose business is seriously damaged by this infamous government competition, unauthorized by the government itself.

Last year there was not money enough to cut the grass in the Smithsonian institution and other parks. Why? Because it had all gone to pay for hothouse plants and flowers. When the grass was waist high, outsiders were allowed to come in and cut it as feed for their horses. Further, the reservations and circles are not properly kept up. Instead of being in model order and glorious with color almost the whole year round, they look woebegone, neglected and sadly in need of the gardener's care a good many months in the year. Congress appropriates the money for this purpose all right, but much of it is diverted, I am told, to the hothouse and cut-flower department which is so popular with Colonel Bingham.

The hot houses are intended for the raising of suitable plants and flowers for the parks and reservations of the national capital, and, as I understand it, for no other purpose. No cabinet officer, senator, congressman or government employee has a right to receive or give the products any more than you or I have a right to steal a plant or flower from Thomas Circle. If we did, one of Major Sylvester's myrmidons would promptly find out the reason why. It is true that cut flowers are sent to the White House from Colonel Bingham's hot houses other than those at the White House itself. I consider that to be entirely proper, but when every friend of the superintendent's can secure a supply free of cost, it is time to call a halt.

I am told that even the fashionable churches are frequently decorated by the very charming kindness of Colonel Bingham, and, in such cases, should certainly be remembered in the prayers of the day. I have before me a mass of evidence on the subject, which I hope to take up again next week. There is absolutely no excuse in the statement that if the cut flowers were not given away they would rot. If so, why raise so many? Why, as is the case, go on building greenhouses? Or else give the surplus to the poor, and not to those who can well afford to purchase flowers.

Des Moines, Ia.—Seedsmen and farmers of the central part of the state have formed the Iowa Seed Corn Growers' Association, the officers of which are: President, John E. Brown, of Mitchellville; vice-president, D. K. Nims, of Emerson; secretary and treasurer, N. E. Harris, Des Moines. The object of the association is to promote the corn raising industry, so as to get the best varieties of seed corn raised and distributed among the farmers.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Women's Agricultural and Horticultural Union of California, organized in this city during the recent meeting of the State Fruit-Growers' Convention, has chosen officers as follows: President, Mrs. M. E. Sherman, of Fresno; first vice-president, Mrs. E. Shields, of Sacramento; secretary, Mrs. Emma Shafter Howard, of Oakland.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Trade has been very good all round lately, and good stock of all kinds has found ready sale at fair prices. A great deal of cloudy weather lately has kept the supply from getting ahead of the demand; and even the poorer grades have been used up well in funeral work, of which there has been a good deal on account of the heavy death rate in this city in January and the first week in February. The grip seems to have had a grip on nearly everybody and many were gripped a little too tightly.

Florists' Meeting at E. A. Nelson's.

The State Society of Indiana Florists met Feb. 5 at E. A. Nelson's place and a large attendance was brought out, for two reasons: viz., the making out of a premium list for the fall show and the promise of Mr. Nelson of a good time. The premiums this fall are to be liberal and figure up to about $1,100.00, and they alone ought to bring some fine stock to the show. Everybody seems determined that this shall be a successful show and if this spirit is kept up it certainly will be. Mr. C. F. McVey was elected to membership.

At 10:30 Mr. Nelson took us over to the house and filled us up in good shape, but as good as the refreshments were, a vase of Bridesmaid roses and two vases of his pink seedling carnation, named in honor of his estimable wife, were better. It is a seedling from Armazindy crossed with Scott, and is best described as a giant Scott. The growth is as strong as Armazindy, but more upright, and before we departed he gave us each a bloom.

Mr. A. Wiegand, who had shortly returned from Cuba, was called on for a speech. He thinks Cuba would make a good palm growing country if white men lived there, but now, he said, we should remember that we are living in God's country and stay away from Cuba.

Messrs E. G. Hill and J. A. Evans, from Richmond, and President J. A. E. Haugh, from Anderson, were present.

Little Rock, Ark.—At the recent annual meeting of the Arkansas State Horticultural Society an interesting lot of papers were read and it was decided to ask the state legislature for a $2,000 appropriation. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: Pres., John P. Logan, Siloam Springs; Vice-Pres., S. H. Nowlin, Little Rock; Sec'y, W. K. Tipton, Little Rock; Treas., Job Vestal, Little Rock.

Des Moines, Iowa.—Frank E. Pease has bought the seed farm and business of F. S. White and will continue the business under the name of the Pease Greenhouse and Nursery Co. Temporary headquarters have been established at 310 Locust street. A catalogue will be issued at once.

Kalispell, Mont.—The Montana State Horticultural Society will hold its first state gathering here this month.

Orange, Cal.—W. W. Perkins, the florist, recently shipped a car load of rose plants to New York. The car contained 48,000 plants.

Morris, Ill.—The Morris Floral Co. has shipped since Dec. 1st, 263,500 rooted cuttings and pips of carnations.

Atlanta, Ga.—Charles Wachendorff was married Jan. 16.

NEW GERANIUM LITTLE PINK

Or Double Pink "Mars," one of the best novelties of the Mars family. The first double of this class ever offered to the trade. It is a very dwarf, bushy, compact and extra free blooming variety, not exceeding 4 to 6 inches in height. Its trusses a pleasing shade of bright pink, upper petals white at the base. Unlike Mars or America in color, it has no trace of salmon shading. Its miniature trusses stand erect, 3 to 6 inches above the foliage. It is excellent for bedding, for the border, or as a pot plant. Too much praise cannot be given this grand little pink variety. Price $5.00 per doz, $35.00 per 100. Half-tone cuts will be furnished free of charge for catalogue. Correspondence solicited. Orders booked now for fall and winter delivery. Received certificate of merit at the New York Convention of the Society of American Florists.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Various Notes.

Trade during January has been very good, with plenty of funeral work. Roses are a very scarce article here on account of so much cloudy weather. The carnations that are coming in now are fine.

Jos. Coenen's little child is very ill with pneumonia.

T. B. Rudy, who has been confined to his bed with la grippe, is much improved and able to be about again.

Jacob Schulz, or "Grandpa," as the boys call him, will astonish some of the florists with his house of new seedling carnations when the time comes.

Wm. Mann's place is in fine condition. His Calla lilies and carnations are bringing a fine crop.

C. H. Kunzman, "the King of the Triumph Carnation," has all the funeral work he can attend to.

Hy Fuch's house of Brides and Maids is very fine.

A. Heitz is building four new houses on his new place, just opposite St. Louis cemetery.

Anders Rasmussen's place at New Albany, Ind., the home of the new carnation "Hoosier Maid," is a sight worth going to see. A house eighty feet long is just now in its beauty. The growth is vigorous, has a good stiff stem and the color is a pure white. It is a sport of Daybreak and a fine thing for cut flower work.

There will be lots of rebuilding of greenhouses here this season.

Hy Lichtefeld.

Beardstown, Ill.—Frank Bros., who recently purchased the greenhouse property of F. Burtenshaw (who succeeded W. Druce Co.), are now the only florists here and all mail matter should be addressed to them.

PORTCHESTER, N. Y.

The annual dinner of the Westchester County Gardeners' Association, which was given at Portchester on Feb. 6, was as usual a most enjoyable affair. Some forty members and their guests sat down to partake of the good things provided, and when cigars, coffee and the other things appeared, the president, Robt. Mallory, opened the flood-gates of oratory. He, on behalf of the society, heartily welcomed the guests, and said they all appreciated the attendance of so many from a distance on such a bad night. He introduced William Smith as toastmaster, and Messrs. Smith, Martin, Scott and Cockburn, representing the Tarrytown Horticultural Society, were each called upon to speak, which they did in complimentary strains mingled with bantering remarks, that though the members of that society had visited Tarrytown last November and succeeded in capturing some of the most coveted prizes, the Tarrytown boys were determined to visit Portchester at the next show held there and retaliate.

Messrs. Carroll Elliott, Leonard Barron and J. I. Dordan were present from New York city. Mr. Elliott paid a glowing tribute to the quality of Portchester coffee. Mr. Barron, speaking for the American Rose Society, urged those present to do all in their power to make the exhibition at the Waldorf-Astoria in March a great success. Mr. Barron's efforts will, no doubt, result in much from that district for the show.

William Anderson, John Shore and many others made addresses touching upon the topics and duties of the hour. Mr. Shore referring to the craze for size and gaudy effects which controlled almost everything horticultural today, lamented the fact that many gems were ignored and too seldom seen; he hoped to see the day when all that was truly beautiful will be appreciated. Private gardeners could do much to bring about this desirable change. The society hopes to hold an exhibition in Portchester next November. J. I. D.

A copy of the American Florist Company's directory of florists, nurserymen and seedsmen for 1901 has reached us. It contains in addition to the corrected lists of names and addresses a good deal of other useful reference matter, making a total of 397 pages. It is published by the American Florist Co., 324 Dearborn street, Chicago, and the price is $2.00.

Norway

The Queen of Commercial White Carnations.

The modern idea of a commercial variety combines large size with free rapid growth and productiveness, a fine keeper and shipper. It gives us pleasure to offer the white we have all been looking for. A distinct feature is that the flowers are remarkably uniform in size, 3 to 3½ inches in diameter. It is selling rapidly.

Place your order at once.

Price of the above two varieties, $1.50 per doz., $10 per 100, $75 per 1000.

Egypt

A Rich Warm Scarlet Crimson.

A distinct departure from all other crimsons. It has modern commercial stems, long and strong; exquisite spicy odor, beautiful rich glowing color; these are its most distinct features. The flower is large and well formed, 2⅞ to 3½ inches in diameter. Can be had in good flower by November 1st to 15th. It is a continuous and free bloomer.

Price of the above two varieties, $1.50 per doz., $10 per 100, $75 per 1000.

Genevieve Lord

The only pink carnation which can claim the proud distinction of having supersided the hitherto invincible William Scott. Genevieve Lord is not only equal to Scott in its palmiest days, but is far superior to that variety in every way. It commands a price that was never obtained for the best Scotts which ever grew. Such a carnation is produced only once in a great while. Place your order early. $5 per 100, $40 per 1000.

PETER REINBERG, 51 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

NORWAY. The biggest commercial white carnation ever introduced. A business-making, money-making carnation to every sense of the word. It combines large size, length and strength of stem, wonderfully vigorous growth and is a free and continuous bloomer.

EGYPT. Scarlet-crimson and the first really good dark carnation that can boast of first-class commercial stems and a rich, spicy odor. The best keeper of all dark varieties.

Price of the above two varieties, $1.50 per doz., $10.00 per 100, $75.00 per 1,000.

GENEVIEVE LORD. The only pink carnation which can rightfully lay claim to having superseded Scott, and it commands a price beyond the reach of the best Scotts which ever grew. It is having a great second-year run. Ready now. Price: $5.00 per 100; $40.00 per 1,000.

Prosperity, Roosevelt, Irene, Queen Louise, Dorothy, Lorna, Mermaid and other new varieties at introducers' prices.

RUSSELL. Again this has proved the most prolific and profitable carnation, giving us so far fully 75 per cent more blooms than Crocker and eight other varieties under same conditions. It never splits its calyx, which Crocker and some others do so badly. After five years' trial, under ordinary culture, it has proved the most profitable and best all-around carnation we ever grew. As large as Scott and of a bright shade of light rose-pink. Strong, well-rooted cuttings now ready at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1,000.

Ethel Crocker, $3.00 per 100. McGowan Sport, $1.50 per 100; $10.00 per 1,000.

HYDRANGEAS.

A superb new hydrangea. Hydrangea Hortensis Mariesii. This is a grand, unique new variety, sent out by James Veitch & Sons, London, England, last winter, 1899-1900. It is named after their collector, Mr. Maries, who introduced it, and described by them "as having remarkably very large sterile flowers, three inches in diameter; color a light pink, shaded mauve, and the finest of Hydrangea Hortensia. This variety is most remarkable and distinct in pots." It is sure to be a success. We offer strong plants, 4½-in. pots, 75c each; $7.50 a doz. Also Deutzia Corymbiflora, a very distinct variety; Deutzia gracilis rosea and Deutzia gracilis venusta, the Azalea Deutzia. Send for circular for price of these and other varieties. ROSES.

Our stock of Everblooming roses, all grown in 4-inch pots, is more extensive and finer than we have ever before offered our customers. All leading popular varieties for sale.

From open ground, we call your attention to our heavy blocks of Gen. Jacqueminot, 2 yrs., strong, own roots; also such valuable climbers as Yellow Rambler, Steigera, Dawson, Climbing Hermosa, Greville, Wichuraiana, etc., etc.

The new climber, Wm. C. Egan, can be supplied in strong one or two-year-old plants at reasonable rates. It is the best of Mr. Dawson's fine hybrids, and is in fact a climbing Malmaison, of the same form and color, and undeniably hardy.

To clear leased land, we offer shrubbery in elegant assortment, at low rates by the thousand. Hoopes Bro. & Thomas, Maple Ave. Nurseries, West Chester, Pa.

Two grand climbers. Climbing Kaiserin, white, $10.00 to $15.00 per 100; Climbing Wootton, red, $10.00 per 100. Field-grown, own roots, 2 to 3 ft. Plenty of other sorts, bush and climbers, hardy and tender.

The Howland Nursey Co., Los Angeles, Cal.

HENRY A. DREER, 714 Chestnut St., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Burpee's Earliest of All is the Sweet Pea for florists. Notwithstanding their dwarf habit and neat slender foliage, the plants are of vigorous growth and come into bloom always ten days to two weeks in advance of the Extra Early Blanche Ferry, which has been heretofore a week ahead of all other varieties. The flowers are as large as those of the regular strains of Blanche Ferry, and have long stout stems, making them entirely satisfactory for cutting; they are borne in close clusters of three, all facing one way. The standards are a bright, rich pink, while the wings are nearly pure white. Burpee's "Earliest of All" is not only the earliest to bloom in open ground, but is also the most desirable for forcing under glass for winter cut-flowers. The dwarf habit of this variety renders it much more easily grown on the benches, admits of closer planting, and from seed sown during the latter part of August blooms may be cut during the holidays, while with the taller varieties no blooms could be had before February or March. Per pkt. 5 cts.; oz. 6 cts.; ¼ lb. 20 cts.; per lb. 60cts.; 5 lbs. or more at 55 cts. per lb.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO., 475-477 N. 5th St., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE BEST COMMERCIAL FERNS.

BY CHARLES W. COX.

Read before the Philadelphia Florists Club Feb. 5.]

Mr. President and Gentlemen:—Your essay committee has selected me to read an essay on "The Best Commercial Ferns." From my own point of view I think they have made a grave mistake in this matter; in selecting a grower to tell you which ferns keep best in the stores, which last longest in the ferneries under adverse circumstances, and on which varieties they realize from 200 to 300 per cent profit. Therefore, if I fail to come up to your expectations, the vote of censure is on the committee.

The fern, the queen of all vegetation; if the palms can claim the title of the princess of the vegetable kingdom, I am sure the ferns can go one better, from their extreme beauty and diversity, as well as their general adaptability in arrangement with flowering and ornamental foliage plants.

Ferns when well grown are indispensable and possess peculiar attractions, as their management gets better understood their popularity increases, and the now almost universal use of plants, and especially of cut fronds, intermixed in floral decorations, has led to the production of a few of the most suitable species in immense quantities. As regards ferns it may reasonably be assumed that although hundreds of thousands are now grown, where hundreds only were to be found a few years ago. Many good and often most beautiful sorts are becoming scarcer every successive season, and the reason assigned for this state of things is that kinds adapted to the purpose of decorating are comparatively few in number, and the demand for such being yearly on the increase, it is only natural that florists should devote more space to these kinds to the exclusion of many others, which, however beautiful in themselves, are unsuitable for indoor decorations. A few of the ferns may be called more curious than beautiful, such as the platyceriums or Elk's horn fern, of which I will speak later.

I have selected a few of the best varieties that I consider most suitable for growing as specimen decorative plants, namely:

Adiantum Farleyense, queen of maidenhairs, makes a fine specimen plant when well grown. A. rhodophyllum is another plant worthy of notice, of compact habit and beautiful colored frond, and will be used largely in the future as a substitute for Farleyense, as it is of a more hardy nature. A. decorum, another free growing useful variety of strong habit that will stand hard usage. A. gracilis, a most elegant fern with light graceful fronds, makes a novel specimen plant, and its fronds might be more used with fine cut flowers. A. elegans, a beautiful maiden hair with light spreading fronds, and is much grown in preference to A. cuneatum for cutting. A. Lathomii is a beautiful variety, with spreading recurved fronds, and makes a fine pot plant. A. Ghiesbreghtii, or Scutum, a very handsome fern which is much used in Europe, makes a fine specimen and ought to be more generally grown. A. Roehfordianum, a most valuable fern of a darker green color than cuneatum, valuable to grow as a pot plant. A. cuneatum, the old variety, is perhaps better known and more cultivated than any other maidenhair fern, probably because it is one of the most graceful and useful of all known species; indeed, nothing can surpass the elegance of its foliage for general use among cut flowers.

Asplenium bulbiferum is rarely seen in this country, but it is grown in large quantities for the London market, and is considered one of the most important ferns for house decoration. A. laxum pumilum, a beautiful species with finely cut fronds, pale glaucous green, a fine table plant. Cibotium Schiedei, though it appears soft, has been found to stand well in decorations, and the large fronds are remarkably handsome, a very quick grower and profitable plant. Cyrtomium falcatum, commonly called the holly fern, remarkable for the thick leathery substance of the fronds, makes a good useful plant for decorating when grown in 6 or 7-inch pots.

Davallia tijiensis plumosa has large spreading fronds, very nicely divided, and makes a splendid plant when grown in pots or pans. D. Mooreana is undoubtedly one of the handsomest decorative ferns known, with large spreading pale green fronds, and it is a free grower. D. Hirta cristata (commonly called Microlepia) is a beautiful fern, with rather large green, finely divided fronds, which spread over and terminate with a beautiful tasseled crest, and is destined to become a profitable plant when well grown for specimens. Lomaria Gibba ought to be more generally grown than it is. I consider it a very useful plant for decorating, as it makes a splendid specimen from four to five feet across, and being so regular in growth is perfectly distinct from all other ferns.

Nephrolepis: This is a most beautiful genus; many of the species have large drooping fronds and they are particularly adapted for growing in elevated positions. N. Bostoniensis is too well known to need any comment. N. Davallioides furcans, an elegant variety with long, arching pinnate fronds, the apices of the pinnæ being forked and crested, and the fronds terminating in a branching crest. it makes a noble specimen plant. N. Wittboldii, a new variety, from the few plants I have seen promises to become a very useful fern.

Platycerium alcicorne, Stag's horn fern, is a very curious and interesting fern, which seems to be growing in favor for decorating conservatories, etc., and will make a first-class novelty mounted on blocks and will find ready sale. P. Grande is considered an improvement on the old variety, it being a stronger grower. Polypodium aureum, a coarse leaved fern, but one that makes a very fine specimen in 6 and 7-inch pots, is well adapted for room decoration and a 2-inch pot plant can be grown into a fine specimen in the space of a year. Polystichum coriaceum is a most desirable fern for all purposes on account of its strong leathery texture, and it will stand rough usage.

Pteris: This genus includes a greater number of species and varieties than any other family of ferns and is also remarkable for the beautiful variegated and crested ferns, the latter being very numerous. P. Mayii is beautifully crested and I consider it one of the best to grow for decorations in 5 and 6-inch pots. P. Wimsettii also makes a fine plant for the same purpose. P. Drinkwaterii is also a promising sort for growing into a good sized specimen. P. Argyrea makes a pretty effect when grown with two and three plants together in an 8-inch pan. P. tremula Smithiania, a very fine crested variety, has the free vigorous habit of the type, each frond being divided into several distinct frondlets and makes a nice specimen. P. Cretica-nobilis, the great feature of this fern is its bold, not to say stately habit, the crested light colored fronds standing up so well as to render it a comparatively small specimen exceedingly ornamental. There are several other varieties of fern that are useful as specimen plants, but I consider the above the most serviceable and profitable.

There seems to be a growing demand for small ferns, for planting in small ferneries and jardinieres. I consider well grown plants in 3-inch pots the most useful for that purpose. I have selected a few specimens that I deem the best, namely: Aspidium Tsussimense, Cyrtomium falcatum, C. Fortunei, C. caryotydium, Lastrea aristata variegata, L. chrysoloba, L. Opaca, Nephrolepis cordata compacta, Polypodium aureum, Polystichum coriaceum, P. Setosum, Pteris hastata, P. Victoria, P. nobilis, P. nobilis variegata, P. Wimsetti, P. densa nana compacta, P. Serrulata major, P. Mayii.

The above list of small ferns is worthy of special attention and when well grown ought to command at least $8 per hundred to pay the grower. It has been mentioned to me on more than one occasion by some of our leading florists to make a specialty of such plants. Now it is a question whether they are willing to pay that price for such stock, when they can purchase commoner kinds at from $2.00 to $6.00 per hundred. Some of our leading growers sell 5,000 for $100 in 2 to 2½-inch pots. Gentlemen, my advice to you in this matter is to grow sweet alyssum at $2.50 per hundred. There is money in it for you, instead of growing ferns at that price. It would be like a Guffey oil well in comparison.

It is evident that the number of plant growers have greatly increased and the collection of plants they cultivate is a proof that their conception of the beautiful is not confined to brilliant colored flowers alone, but that they are able to appreciate the elegance of our noble ferns, independent of bloom, which has been for so many years the sole aim of the florist, who looked forward to the development of these, in many instances short lived flowers, as the sole reward of the whole season's labor. How it was that we were so long in learning to love these highly ornamental ferns it is difficult to say, but we are becoming thoroughly alive now to the noble beauty and gracefulness displayed by some of our valuable ferns.

Let us state distinctly, however, that great as our love for ornamental ferns may be, we do not wish to exalt them to the obliteration of the flowering plants, for although the well grown ferns are highly ornamental when grouped together, we are fully persuaded that a judicious selection from both classes, according to the space at our disposal, is the surest way of producing a gay and cheerful effect throughout the entire year.

The cultivation of ferns is much easier than that of plants grown entirely for the beauty of their flowers. To produce plants profusely adorned with flowers close attention must be given to resting and starting into growth, etc., at the proper season, but the plants now under consideration have to be treated upon quite a different principle, for as their beauty is to be sought in the foliage the object should be to make them grow as vigorous as possible from the earliest stages, so that their characters may be seen at an early period of their existence.

Now is the time, taking into consideration the growing demand for ferns, that the growers and retailers should get together and establish a system of regulating prices of well grown good varieties so that the grower can make a living out of it, which we must all admit he is not doing at the present time, at the prevailing prices.

DES MOINES, IA.

Various Items.

On the 8th of this month we had a very severe snow storm, in fact the hardest for a number of years, followed with 12 degrees below zero. It had its effect on business.

We took a spin around some of the houses lately and found Lambert making big preparations for a rushing trade in the plant department, having quantities of most all the leading bedding stock. His Easter stock looks about right for this season of the year.

At J. F. Marshall's we found him busy as ever with his carnations, which are looking fine. He grows Crane, Joost, Maceo, Evanston, Bradt, Jubilee and McGowan. We noticed some fine seedlings, among which we hope he will find a prize winner.

Since my visit Mr. Marshall has had the misfortune to lose his youngest child, whose death occurred Feb. 7. Mr. and Mrs. Marshall have the sympathy of the craft in their affliction and we can but say:

"There is a calm the poor in spirit know
That softens sorrow and that sweetens woe;
There is a peace that dwells within the breast
When all without is stormy and distrest;
There is a light that gilds the darkest hour
When trouble thickens and when tempests lower;
That calm is faith, and hope and love is given;
That peace remains when all beside is riven;
That light shines down to man direct from heaven."

GENTLEMEN: Your favor of the 9th inst. asking me for an expression of views as regards your heaters as compared to others we have tried, is at hand.
BLUE ISLAND, ILL., March 11, 1894.

Will say, in the fourteen years since we began, we have made three changes in our heating apparatus, and after three years' use of one and one-half of the other one, am pleased to say, I would not be induced to exchange it for the two heaters of your make. With the latter I can say, you have given us the best you could ever put in a heater, and would have cost you many times more to improve upon it. We have a number of your heaters in use, and I think all will say the same. Yours truly, CHAS. BUETOW.

DEAR SIRS: Replying to your favor, would state that I have in use three of your Improved Green House Boilers which I have had for five years. Before purchasing yours I had been using the Dievine Boiler. I like your boiler in better because it has a larger front and water back, which allows no heat to escape. The saving of fuel in your boiler is about one-fourth. Coal is compared with other boilers. Your boiler is easier to run than other boilers.
Yours truly,
M. WEIGAND,
Evanston, Ill.

Dear Sir:-

It is with pleasure that we say your Iron Gutter used on our new houses have given entire satisfaction they contain more valuable points of merit than you claim for them

It would have taken 20000 feet of Glass to cover the extra bench space which we obtained by using your method of construction and furthermore we do not think we could have had the present showing of carnation in our old style of construction on account of extra light we got by using your Gutter. We shall want more Gutters this coming season

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Bulbous Flowers.

A few random hints on what is obtainable on the market and their proper uses may be of interest to many. As spring approaches there is naturally a greater variety of stock to be had, and most flower buyers are already asking for spring blossoms. It is becoming more apparent every year that the season marks in flowers are being wiped out and many expect that it will soon come to pass that almost any flower can be had at any time of the year. Just at present almost anything can be picked up on the New York market, and florists can have no excuse for being unable to suggest a large variety of suitable material for any kind of job.

Store windows are becoming more attractive by artistic arrangements of bulbous flowers, and a vase or two of your choicest placed on the end of the counter may tempt many to buy. It has been our experience that morning customers as a rule prefer to buy the flowers they see on the counter in preference to those in the icebox, and we advise the placing of a portion of your stock where people cannot help but see it. Much of the bulbous flowers seen on the market is strong evidence that many growers are penny wise and dollar foolish. The bargain counter of the bulb store is a poor place for the commercial cut flower grower to buy his stock at. The man who produces quality reaps many rewards, two of which are better prices and self-pride.

Daffodils.

Now, as to the uses of bulbous flowers. Whilst they are permissible at every kind of function, they are distinctively appropriate for morning affairs. We recently arranged a "yellow table" for a luncheon party of eighteen. In the best houses no cloth is used on a luncheon table—that is, if the table is what it ought to be—of the finest mahogany and highly polished. This particular table was round, and we used a 20-inch round flat basket, which we first filled with Adiantum Farleyense plants out of 5-inch pots, selecting light, bright foliage, and filling so as to completely hide the basket. We put on No. 25 wire 200 single trumpet daffodils, putting three flowers on one stick; these were arranged at irregular heights among the ferns; then we mixed through and fringed the basket off with 200 campernelle jonquils, placing some to rest on the table. A band of 7-inch satin-faced taffeta ribbon was placed around the edge of the basket to emphasize the beauty of the fern; four short bows of the same material were arranged to connect with the band, and sprays of Narcissus Soleil d'Or were put across the bows and here and there on the table a small Farleyense leaf and a spray of jonquils were placed to break the formal line, but nothing was done to interfere with dishes or make it appear heavy. Yellow freesia (Leichtlini major) was used for the finger bowls.

We have done the same table on a previous occasion, when we used a low green Venetian bowl and campernelle foliage instead of the basket and fern. We prefer vase work to baskets where table decorations are concerned, but it is not always possible to do effective work with vases on large tables. The very finest work can be done with single daffodils or pretty jonquils, and some very choice sorts are seen but too seldom. Wherever they are used the foliage should be kept low, the flowers showing prominently, remembering always that solid flat arrangements will destroy the beauty of any flower, particularly spring flowers.

Roman Hyacinths.

A great many more white flowers, such as paper white narcissus and Roman hyacinths, are being used than formerly, principally because they are sweet and cheap. A wreath of Roman hyacinths fringed with Farleyense, with just a cluster of red or pink roses, may be made to equal if not exceed in beauty many a more expensive design. We often think more of them could be thus used with profit.

Tulips.

Tulips are usually difficult flowers to arrange and there is no possible excuse for some of the colors being seen. We know one party who makes a specialty of choice sorts and it's a pleasure to work with the stock. The tulip, more on account of its color, is the one bulbous flower more than any other that is used for dinner table decoration, and to be strictly correct in arranging them nothing but their own foliage should be used. Just now, of course, they are very scant of dress, and often other greens must be put with them. Care should be used, however, to avoid exotic effects; some grass-like foliage is best in the absence of their own. Greens should be kept low, the flowers arranged at irregular heights.

A tulip dinner or luncheon can be made very interesting by having everything on the table conform to either the color or form, both if possible, of the flower. Ices can be served out of single tulips, in fact a clever chef or confectioner can serve many forms of dainties from these flowers. Much of the real beauty would depend on the arrangement of the flowers; often the use of old Dutch vases or bisque ware is more appropriate and produces better results than the round board or basket. If a basket is used, a simple green willow or rush flower basket is best in such arrangements. The tulips are bunched and put closely together, giving the impression that they have just been gathered from some Dutch flower garden. Very few prettier effects can be produced than that of a table with, say, from 200 to 500 Couleur Cardinal, Chrysolora, highly colored La Reines or any of the one-colored tulips, but your design must be wholly in accordance with the flower.

Very effective garlands can be made from tulips. First wire them, turn the foliage back, also the petals of the flower (they will remain that way), tie them to face out, using a string of smilax or some such green. You will find them a cheap garland and if made say from 4 to 6 feet long and hung up on a green or contrasting colored background they will show up surprisingly good. Or they look well suspended from balconies, etc.

Freesia is being abundantly used where small, sweet flowers are wanted. It is not much for show, but placed in small vases, on desk or table, it is capable of showing powerful influence; a bunch of it might go in any box of flowers or be tied at the side of any bunch. It is a favorite for the finger bowl.

Lily of the Valley.

Lily of the valley has been bringing high prices this season. Now, of course, it is getting down within the reach of all, and no store should be without some of it. Whenever a critic comes in for something choice one need not be ever ashamed to point to this grand little flower, and if it is fresh and sweet it is more than likely that it will be chosen from amongst its gaudy comrades. A well made bouquet of lily of the valley, with or without a cluster of some other flower, is still one of the choicest of all bouquets. The foliage should be greatly subdued or almost entirely omitted in the hand or bridal bouquet. Where it is used in a wreath the leaves should be used, but placed below the flowers. In vase work all the foliage is permissible. In the corsage bouquet very little foliage is used, and the bunch is tied with small bow of very narrow white ribbon. Use a white headed pin. Boutonnieres of valley are not as popular as they were once upon a time; the price and the popularity of simpler forms are responsible perhaps.

Other Flowers.

Dutch hyacinths are so far very poor. Soon, however, pretty mixed bulb baskets or pans can be made up, and with a bow of showy ribbon attached might induce many persons to buy. Try your hand on one or two; let the people see some of your artistic work without ordering or paying for it first.

Harrisiis are becoming plentiful, and what is more useful in a rush funeral order? And very few flowers can equal them tied in a flat bunch. Bunches of pansies, primroses and such flowers are occasionally being asked for by the romantically inclined, and forget-me-nots, which are coming in fine now, are jewels for the sentimental. A small basket of myosotis and valley with just one rose bud and a bow of blue ribbon is a choice present for a young girl; sometimes the baskets are covered with surah silk and the name and date printed on the ribbon.

Roses.

At Thorley's we recently saw a bouquet of white roses with shower of pink baby ribbon and broad streamers of pink; it was at night, and the contrast of colors was something striking; the bouquet was intended for the second attempt of a widow.

It is often the case that we see wreathes or bunches of white flowers with just one fine red rose. There's a good deal of meaning in a red rose being thus prominently arranged and its effect is pleasing. Bouquets of Golden Gate roses were popular this season for debutantes; it is an easy rose to bruise, but a glorious one if clean and the tinge of color is deepened. We notice a most peculiar thing about this flower. If it is grown strong the blooms are inclined to become deformed and turn to greenish shades. We find that the medium or smaller flowers have the best color and form. These we wire and make the handle of the bouquet very small, entwine and tie with white, blue or light pink ribbon. The latter is best. Farleyense goes well with this rose, and also a cluster of valley.

Liberty, though a magnificent rose, has not been as abundant as we thought it would be. Old Meteor has been coming in in floods, and kind of jostled the new one; better is expected of it another year. One fine Liberty is worth a dozen Meteors where quality is appreciated.

Carnations, well, we will leave them for another day, and will illustrate what we say by a few special designs. IVERA.

AN ELABORATE DECORATION.

The dinner, dance and supper given by the Clarence Mackays at the Waldorf Astoria on Feb. 1st was one of the most elaborate and artistic decorations seen in the United States for some time, and we doubt if a part of the feat was ever equaled. The Mackays are ambitious and are worth millions. They desired to give their friends a surprise, and in the development of the surprise outdo anything done in New York in recent years.

This they succeeded in doing by giving almost carte blanche orders to caterer and florist.

The greater part of the first and second floors of the hotel had been hired for the occasion. The Astor gallery was the room de resistance. Here the dinner tables were set, seating 190 of New York's most exclusive society people. The walls of this magnificent room were prettily draped in wild smilax, with here and there long clusters and garlands of bougainvillea. Groups of plants were placed in the corners and center of the room, and immense plants of bougainvillea were arranged among the palms, the whole being lit up by thousands of fairy lights. In the center of the main table, covering an oval 35 by 19 feet, was a low bed of Adiantum Farleyense, and among these ferns were arranged some 3,500 cattleya blooms on plants. Radiating from this central group along all the tables were delicate garlands of Farleyense and cattleyas, their beauty punctuated by ruffles and bows of broad cattleya ribbon. Something like 2,000 cattleya blooms were used in these garlands, and the whole color scheme, which is Mrs. Mackay's favorite—rose-lavender—gave one of the most effective decorations imaginable.

The vestibule outside this great room is several hundred feet long, and it was completely turned into a green bower all the way, smilax and palm hiding ceiling and wall, a green baize carpet on the floor adding to the effect.

The public restaurant of the Waldorf had been engaged, and this was made to represent a forest: the ceiling and walls were hidden with wild smilax and Florida moss; small tables were placed beneath immense bay trees on the floor; five thousand electric lights were arranged among the greens and trees, and the scene was very fine.

When the guests had finished dinner they were coaxed into the room down stairs and none of them expected any further developments. In twenty minutes' time the dinner tables were cleared, carpet taken up and the polished floor and a prettily decorated ball room took the place of the dining room. It was a big surprise for the guests, who were invited up to dance, and the magnitude of the job can be imagined only by those who were there to see it.

Small & Sons had charge of the decorations, which were executed under the direction of the artist, Arthur Merritt. Many of the leading retailers took a peep at the completed work and all gave great praise to its excellence.

A ROYAL WREATH.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a wreath contributed by the members of the Montreal Gardeners' and Florists' Club toward the decorating of the statue of Queen Victoria, Victoria Square, Montreal, Feb. 2.

The wreath was five feet in diameter and was composed of lilies, orchids, roses, Buddleia Asiatica and violets, and included heather and shamrock to fully represent the different nationalities of which the club is composed.

It was a fine piece of work and reflects the greatest credit upon Messrs. Joseph Bennett, A. C. Wilshire and G. A. Robinson, who arranged it.

BEDDING GERANIUMS.

By Edwin A. Kanst.

[Read before the Chicago Florists' Club, Feb. 15.]

In selecting varieties for this paper I have chosen only such as I am familiar with and know to be excellent bedders. Many geraniums that appear well under glass make a very poor showing when planted out. I am of the opinion that the strong growers are usually the ones best adapted for this purpose, or the ones that show the most vigor in growth rather than those which show great abundance of bloom under glass. In looking over our stock before planting out in the spring I have often noticed that some of the best bedders show the least bloom, so that it will be seen that at least a season's trial outside is necessary before determining whether a geranium is a suitable bedder or not. I also believe that where the best results are to be obtained the plants should be grown with the idea in mind that they are to be used for bedding purposes, and not rely too much on the strong natural resources of the plants to bring them into proper conditions outside.

The geranium is perhaps the most satisfactory plant known to florists, because it is so easily propagated and requires so little attention. For this reason we regard it as one of the commonest of plants, though many of our parks and private gardens would find it a hard matter to procure a substitute for this old-time standby. The extensive use of herbaceous and perennial plants in connection with the natural style of landscape gardening now so popular in this country has done much to reduce the numbers of geraniums used. The planting of these plants in connection with a landscape is considered bad form, it being claimed that their bright colors do not harmonize with quiet and restful views; therefore the landscape gardener has confined them to isolated places apart from the landscape view. However this may be, I believe that the geranium and many others of our most beautiful cultivated plants will continue to be favorites with many persons after the fad of substituting hardy plants is a thing of the past. The period of bloom with most herbaceous plants is usually not longer than a month or so, while geraniums, ageratums, heliotropes, etc., are in bloom from May 21st to October 21st, or until cut down by the frost. I do not wish to give the idea that I am not in favor of herbaceous plants, for I am, but I do maintain that in order to have satisfactory results in this climate one must give them during the summer nearly as much attention for a much less amount of bloom.

It has been my experience that cuttings taken from geraniums in the fall and rooted will make much stronger plants and more desirable for bedding purposes than if grown from cuttings made during the winter months. Fall rooted ones, after being kept in a dry condition, can be started along in February and by bedding out time are strong, thrifty plants, while those propagated in the winter are inclined to be weaker and smaller owing to insufficient time to develop. Too much watering in summer time I believe is often the cause of plants rotting off or producing a small amount of bloom. Geraniums can stand a great amount of drought without injury to them and produce the most flowers when in a somewhat dry condition. Over watering causes some to grow rank while others rot off altogether.

I would not advocate setting plants too far apart, as this causes them to grow uneven on account of having too much light. For ordinary spring grown plants I think fourteen inches is about the right distance. This is not so wide apart but what the plants can grow together in a short time, when they will continue to make a uniform bed all summer. Frequent stirring of the soil is always beneficial, but to avoid over watering seems to me to be the principal point to be borne in mind in the care of plants bedded out doors.

I have selected the following varieties as being among the best and most reliable bedding geraniums, at least in this climate at the present time. There are perhaps many varieties known to others at this time equally as good, but not having had experience with these I am therefore unable to give any accurate information regarding them:

Double varieties:

S. A. Nutt. Of all geraniums, both double and single, I think this one is the finest. We are asked the name of this variety many times during the summer. There must be something about its color and habit that attracts one, and besides, it has such a strong constitution.

Mme. A. Chevrelierre. This is a double white that can be relied on as a continual bloomer and excellent in every respect.

Waddington. May be an old variety but it has its place as a dwarf pink; a great bloomer and is always attractive.

Pres. Leon Simon. Clear red.

N. Casteline. Pinkish red.

Alfred Tennyson. Light scarlet.

Beaute Poitevine. Brilliant salmon.

Raspail improved. Large scarlet.

Alphonse Ricard. Orange red.

Single varieties:

Meteor. Red.

General Grant. A very old scarlet variety but one that is extremely useful.

Mrs. E. G. Hill. Salmon color; very strong grower.

Benjamin Schroeder. Finest single pink.

Athlete. Large scarlet flower.

Margaret de Layer. Reddish salmon.

Mrs. G. M. Gaar. Pure white.

J. R. Lowell. Orange red.

Silver leaved:

Mountain of Snow.

Mme. Salleroi.

Many new varieties have recently been introduced, even more, I think, than there has been any demand for. Of course, one is always anxious to try new varieties, but a wise person will hesitate before discarding the old tried ones for those that he has not given a thorough trial. And again, those that do well in one locality are sometimes of little use in others.

Among the new geraniums there are several that I have seen which I believe have special merit and which I am going to try next summer. They are as follows:

Le Soleil. Double red; lighter than S. A. Nutt.

Mme. Rozaine. Pure double white.

Mme. Landry. Semi-double salmon.

John P. Cleary. Single red.

Due de Montmort. Double; nearly purple.

Frances Perkins. Double pink.

Countess de Castries. Pink.

Jean Viaud. Semi-double pink.

Clyde. Single scarlet.

Ian Maclaren. Light salmon pink.

Mme. J. Cebril. Single pink salmon.

In the discussion that followed Mr. Woodward said he thought the old Queen of the West should be included in the list. He still has it in fine healthy condition, though others noted that with many it has been diseased of late years.

Messrs. Palinsky and Jurgens said that while Mr. Kanst's methods were correct it was impossible to apply them commercially as regards the growing of plants for bedding purposes only, as the plants could not be sold without having one or more trusses of bloom on. They also said that single flowered sorts would not sell. The people insisted upon having semi-double blooms only.

Mr. Jurgens said he now placed John Doyle at the head of his list of scarlets, as it is brighter than Nutt and as good in other ways. But Nutt is still close to the top. Frances Perkins is his best pink. He had had some trouble with it, though, from disease last summer.

DWARF NASTURTIUMS.

Are dwarf nasturtiums free and continuous enough in blooming to be used for bedding? Could they be started early in pots and transplanted the same as other bedding plants? H. T.

Yes, they can be used to good effect in some styles of flower gardening, but not where high color is required or where a small, compact form is the object, as green would most likely be the predominant color and as the growth is free no clipping can be done.

On the margin of a long border, or a plant here and there in the mixed border, or an edging to some stronger growing plant, they are quite effective. The value of the dwarf nasturtiums as flowering plants rests entirely with the quality of the soil. If a heavy loam, and more particularly if enriched, they will grow so freely and have such a rampant growth of leaves that the flowers will never be seen; they will flower poorly and the flowers will seldom come above the foliage. They need only a light gravelly or sandy soil. In either of these soils the flowers stand up above the foliage, and they make beautiful, showy plants.

Yes, they can be raised and grown in small pots and planted out as we do with the great majority of our bedding plants. Sow the end of March, and when potting use poor soil and keep the plants in the fullest light. Wm. Scott.

ROSE NOTES.

Propagating.

The last week of bright sunshine has ripened the wood nicely and cuttings taken now will be much superior to those taken during a long cloudy spell. There is no time to spare now in propagating your roses, if you intend planting in June out of three or three and one-half-inch pots. The cuttings should be potted off when the roots are one-half to three-fourths of an inch long, otherwise there is too much danger of breaking them off, and besides, the potting can be done much quicker than when the roots are longer. It is a bad mistake to leave the cuttings in the sand until the roots are two or three inches long and beginning to turn brown. An unnatural growth results, and as there is no food in the sand the strength of the cutting is exhausted and it gives us a weak plant.

Potting.

The best soil for potting is well-rotted sod. If it should be too heavy it can be lightened by adding sand. Manure of any kind in the soil at this stage is of no benefit. The cuttings should be potted firmly and then placed in a sunny house near the glass and shaded till the roots have taken hold of the soil. Be careful that the first watering is properly done. Have the soil moist to the bottoms of the pots, but avoid having it turned into mud. It is always safest to then keep the young plants somewhat on the dry side till the roots show around the inside of the pots. An occasional syringing over the foliage will be of great benefit.

Watering.

Of course you must never allow the plants to get too dry. I find that the best time to look over the pot plants is in the afternoon, as it is easier to tell then which require water and which do not. It is best to use a watering pot, for it takes an expert to single out the dry plants with the hose when they are so small and not get more or less water on the adjoining plants, which may not need any for some time. By improper treatment in watering many young plants are lost entirely and others are weakened or checked. Sometimes the injury is the result of being too dry, but more often the damage comes from being too wet. The hose is used too freely on most places, and this is really the cause of many failures, shown by yellow and sickly plants.

Once Checked Always Weak.

The health and condition of the plant in this stage has a direct influence upon its future welfare. I have noticed that a plant that is thrifty while in a two-inch pot will generally remain so after being repotted or planted out on the bench, but a sickly plant, even if it should have apparently regained health and vigor, will with the slightest mistreatment show its old weakness again. Hence the importance of giving the young plants the best of care. The most competent man on the place should have charge of them. The surface of some soils becomes covered with a green growth. This should be removed whenever it forms, as otherwise it is impossible to tell the condition of the soil without knocking the plant out of the pot, which last should be avoided as much as possible.

As soon as the roots commence to work around the sides of the pot the plants should be shifted into three-inch pots. It is a mistake to wait until the plants are pot-bound before shifting, for they will become stunted and instead of growing right along they will stand still for ten days or two weeks. We should never allow the young plants to receive any check whatever.

The Blooming Plants.

Owing to continued firing our rose beds are apt to be dry on the bottom, a condition which interferes with the plants' growth, and consequently injures the size of the flowers. You will often find the bed in general moist enough, except right above the heating pipes, where the soil may be dry. It takes very careful watering under such circumstances to maintain an even moisture all through the bed.

At this time of the year, when the sun is steadily getting stronger, it often occurs that when there is a sudden change to bright sunshine after a short cloudy spell the roses seem to wilt. This is the result of soft growth fostered during the dark days. A light spraying over the heads of the plants will help them to straighten up again. I know of beginners being deceived by this, and supposing the roses were dry they would hurriedly begin to water, which was a mistake. Always examine the beds before watering. Have the hose in the right hand and work backwards. While the the left hand examines the soil row by row of plants the right hand follows with the water. M. Starch.

DISEASED CYCAS.

A customer of mine has a cycas which is in a very bad condition. I send a leaf of same. The other three leaves are not dead at the tip like this one, but all have three or more of the pinnae dead in patches on both sides of the leaf. Can you tell me the cause of the trouble and whether anything can be done to put the plant in good condition again?

J. B.

From the appearance of the cycas leaf that accompanied this inquiry it seems evident that the trouble arises from an unhealthy condition of the roots of the plant in question.

It is naturally somewhat difficult to say positively just what caused this condition without seeing the plant, but it seems probable that this was a newly imported cycas stem, the leaf growth of which was forced up before it had made roots enough to sustain the leaves, and while the stem itself contained nourishment enough to cause the leaves to expand, yet it could not feed them indefinitely without the aid of roots.

Try keeping the plant rather dry, though not dust dry, for a month or two, and unless the stem has already begun to decay from too much moisture, the plant may ultimately recover strength enough to produce another growth of leaves during the coming summer.

W. H. Taplin.

MIGNONETTE.

At the last meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club Mr. E. Buettner favored the members with a talk on growing mignonette.

He said that two important points were a light, airy house and good, clean seed to start with. He requires seed that has been grown under glass, as that grown outside is pretty apt to be mixed. He grows Allen's Defiance and sows the seed in three-inch pots in August and keeps the pots in frames till September, when he plants in the house. He thins out the seedlings in the pots to the two strongest, and when planting out in the house selects the strongest of the two. He does not recommend planting the seed in the bench inside where the plants are to flower, as the soil is apt to become sour and the plants do better in the frames outside. The plants must not be allowed to become pot bound. He uses the same compost as for his roses, etc., and finds that a heavy soil is best for mignonette. He feels it essential that the plants have a house to themselves, though he believes they could be successfully grown in the same house with carnations.

After being planted out inside in good soil the main points are tying up and keeping clean. He holds that five spikes of Allen's Defiance should bring $2 to $2.50 a dozen to make it really profitable to the growers, as it brings only one crop and the plants average only about four spikes each. This variety makes large spikes with heavy stems, but is somewhat lacking in odor, and the color is more inclined to green than some others. And then the crop can be cut out in February and the house used for other stock at a season when space is at a premium. May's mignonette is more fragrant, but the spikes are more uneven in size.

After planting out on the bench he pinches out the center to make the plant throw several branches, but that is all that is done, except to take off the side branches from these. He maintains a temperature of 50 degrees and believes that it is a mistake to keep the temperature lower than that. He can't see that it makes any difference how far the plants are from the glass. He begins to cut bloom shortly before Christmas, and the crop is cut out in February.

For spikes to sell at a lower price Machet is better, as it flowers from fall to spring, and though the spikes are not large they are more numerous. Improved Miles Spiral is good, too.

To produce specimen pot plants he would sow in three-inch pots and thin out to three strongest seedlings around the edge of the pot and repot into four-inch and five-inch before becoming pot-bound. For Easter pot plants he would use Machet and sow in October and November. When in blooming pots the plants will make a great growth if set in a hotbed and the pots being moved occasionally to keep the plants from rooting through too much, but plants so grown won't last well afterward. This can be overcome to some extent by moving the plants into the house and hardening off some before using.

He says beware of the moth that lays eggs from which are hatched the little worms that are so fond of mignonette. One of the worst pests he has had to deal with, though, is black thrips. He says the man who will discover a really effective method of exterminating thrips will win a lot of money.

As to the profit in growing mignonette, he believed that there was more money in devoting the same space to chrysanthemums, and that this would be so until people were ready to pay a better price for fine mignonette, at least in the Chicago market. At present $1.50 to $1.75 a dozen is considered a good price here, and it ought to bring $2 to $2.50 to make it a good paying crop.

SOME REQUIREMENTS FOR THE ELEVATION OF OUR BUSINESS.

BY J. J. BENEKE.

[Read before meeting of the St. Louis Florists' Club, Feb. 14.

In accepting the request made by your trustees to read a paper before you today upon "Some Requirements for the Elevation of Our Business" I do this with pleasure, as I know that two essays a month as directed by our trustees will elevate our club mentally and also help us all materially in the advancement of our business. I know that there are members of our club who are better able to handle this subject than I am, still I recognize the fact that when called upon it is the duty of every member of the club to acknowledge and perform to the best of his ability.

In considering the problem of the elevation of our business we find in our daily experience that the successful man in our, as in any other calling, is the systematic one, the one who pays the strictest attention to every detail and who watches any movements that tend to the promotion of his interests. The old saying is: "Everlastingly at it brings success," and this is nowhere more true than when applied to the florist's occupation. The first object of great importance to the greenhouse man, or grower, as we call him, is to keep up the standard of his stock and be abreast of the times.

Taking the figures of the last census, our population is estimated at over 500,000 people, and our business represents capital invested of several million dollars, and this sum certainly indicates that we are entitled to claim recognition among the industries of our country. But in order to keep up our standing the first requisites are systematic work, cleanliness and orderly arrangements. These must be preserved by the grower and retailer alike if he feels interested in the elevation of the business, for on cleanliness and proper display of his stock depend the sales and the profit. In many places among the growers will be found muddy walks, benches worn out and broken down and plenty of weeds. This does not always indicate that the growers are too busy and have not the time for weeding or repairing; still, this state of affairs is not so prevalent now as it was a few years ago; nevertheless many establishments of today need a change for the better.

A good manager and reliable help is what these places need. The watering, ventilating and firing should be done systematically by trained help, and these men should be held responsible for the regular performance of their duties. In this way the men under you will become more interested in the appearance of your place and will also take a pride in keeping the premises in good condition.

The same principle of systematic work also applies to the store men. At these places the flower loving public expect an aesthetic display of elegance for the general taste. The retailer should be the educator of the community. A close observance of these points will aid in raising our business to a higher standard than it now occupies.

It is no doubt true that the St. Louis Florists' Club accomplishes some good by bringing members of the trade together for the purpose of exchanging ideas. It helps to elevate them and they learn from each other what they require in their business. But why is it that not every florist in St. Louis belongs to our club? This is a question often asked me. My answer has always been this: The best florists of our city are members of our club. Those on the outside don't seem to realize the benefits to be derived by themselves through these mutual interchanges of ideas and experiences in the business. If they did they would all be in our list of members. Membership in the Florists' Club should be encouraged by the proprietors of all establishments, be they large or small, for their members will receive knowledge and information of plants, flowers and gardening. These are agencies for the promotion and advancement of our business.

Our local exhibition is a good opportunity for the florist to display his talent and enterprise and make a good impression on the public mind. But very few do this. Some say they have not the time, others say there is not enough money in it for them to make a display. They don't seem to think of the indirect benefit they will derive from it after they have made a creditable display and show the public what they can do and arouse in the public a demand for their products and impress them with the knowledge that they are in the florist's business to elevate it to its highest possible place—and I say finally that one of the foremost requirements for the advancement of our business is for every employer or employe in the trade, be it man or woman, is to have a good horticultural education, and the only available way to get this is to become a member of our club. The question box is open for all, and any information you require for your business will be cheerfully given by men of experience.

At present our business is by no means discouraging, but it seems to me that if the florists of our city would adopt a system along the lines of what I have read they would not only gain a full measure of recognition among the trades but by elevating public taste would also elevate their standing socially and rise in the community financially. A hint to the wise.

MONTREAL.

The Montreal Gardeners' and Florists' Club will have an exhibition of carnations Feb. 26th, and various American growers will improve the opportunity to show their new varieties to the Canadian florists.

All flowers for exhibition should be addressed to the Montreal Gardeners' and Florists' Club, care Joseph Bennett, 1361 Peel street, and it is suggested that flowers be sent early to allow them an opportunity to recoup after the journey before being judged.

CARNATION NOTES.

Carnations for Easter.

It is not too early to be thinking about your Easter crop of carnations. Easter will be only about six weeks away when these notes reach you, and if you begin at once you can do a great deal toward improving your cut for that day both in quality and in quantity. The plants will be making a strong growth now and to help them to finish off with good, large blooms they will need more or less feeding, according to the condition of the soil, and especially if they have bloomed a good deal during the winter.

The shoots that are to produce the Easter blooms should be lengthening out pretty lively now, in order to be in bloom by that time. Varieties that are in full crop now will likely be off-crop by that time, but those that are just between crops now can be depended on for a good cut by that time. For instance, our White Cloud, which is in full crop now, will not give us many Easter blooms, but our Flora Hill, which is just between crops, will be in full bloom again by that time.

That reminds me of how well these two varieties work together. Each is at its best when the other is at its poorest stage, and if they are handled properly you can have a steady supply of highest grade white the year round with only these two varieties. If we could combine the good qualities of these two varieties into one variety we would surely have a breadwinner. If in a week or two you think your crop is not coming on as fast as it should, it will do no harm to raise the night temperature a few degrees, providing you give plenty of air on all favorable occasions. The sun is so much stronger, and even on cloudy days the light is stronger than it was a month ago. There will be but few days when you cannot give some air during a part of the day, and by being liberal with air and food you can keep the growth strong and solid.

Better begin a mild form of forcing a month before Easter rather than to crowd them too hard during the last week or two and perhaps ruin your plants for future blooming. Easter is your last chance for high prices, and you can hardly afford to be off crop then, but it does not pay to ruin the plants even then, because good carnations are profitable way up to June and later.

Watch the Supports.

Keep them well supported. Some of them may be growing too tall for the supports and will need another, a taller support of some kind, or perhaps the numerous shoots will be growing up outside of the supports and you will need to go over them occasionally and put them back into the proper places. You cannot expect to cut blooms with long straight stems if they are not supported upright. They are bound to grow crooked if they lie all over the bench. Do not neglect disbudding, however busy you may be with other work, and do it as soon as the buds are large enough to handle safely. I know that nearly every grower is crowded with work now with his spring stock and often we think we can let such jobs as disbudding wait a few days while we do a lot of repotting, etc. The few days run into a couple of weeks and before we know it the buds are opening up and a crop of good blooms is just about ruined. If your carnations are doing well it would be poor business to allow them to go down in quality in order to put in your time on some other crop on which you expect to realize at some future time. We find that it pays to keep the quality right up to the highest possible point until we are ready to throw them out, or, in other words, it pays to throw them out as soon as they cease being profitable. Then you will not be wasting any time watering and merely keeping alive a lot of plants that are bringing in no money.

Those who grow spring bedding stock can use all the room they can get hold of from now on, and any bench that is in poor shape now might just as well be thrown out and used for more profitable crops. If you grow no spring bedding stock you can make good use of the room for your young carnation plants. If you can plant out of 3 and 3½ inch pots, instead of 2 and 2½ inch, it will pay you well to do so, especially if you want to house them early in the summer.

You will find lots of young weeds springing up now, and you must keep the benches clear of them. Most weeds are rank growers and strong feeders, and it does not take them long to impoverish the soil and leave little food for the blooming stock. A. F. J. Baur.

THE MARQUIS.

Your correspondent, A. F. J. Baur, speaks of the Marquis as a late variety. We have been picking Marquis since September with a constant and increasing crop to date and which will continue to increase till Easter when we shall have simply an immense crop with plenty of flowers thereafter until the plants are thrown out.

The Marquis makes absolutely nothing but flowering wood; therefore if it grows it flowers. It will flower as early as the grower permits. Of course this presupposes proper soil and other conditions as well as proper care. If Mr. B., or anyone else, has found the Marquis late it is because of improper treatment or conditions.

I will add that we finished planting the first house of Marquis Aug. 18th. Had they been housed by Aug. 1, we would have had flowers still earlier. After filling our orders for about 170,000 rooted cuttings we took what were left—practically the culls—were late in planting out, experienced the driest season for ten years, and consequently housed plants only about half size. Our Marquis have been earlier and more prolific than any other variety we grow.

Because a grower does not succeed with a new variety the first time trying he should not condemn it, especially if others do succeed; but rather should seek to learn the proper conditions and methods of culture required by that variety. I will take occasion to give, at no distant date, in detail our method of culture for the Marquis.

NEW CARNATIONS.

We present herewith engravings from photographs of two more seedlings grown by Mr. Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass. These two, in addition to the three illustrated last week, will be shown at Baltimore, making five new sorts of great promise. Mr. Fisher's descriptions follow:

No. 130 is a white ground penciled with pink; very chaste. A free, vigorous grower and bloomer; 3½-inch flowers on long, wiry stems; plant exceedingly healthy and of fine habit.

No. 270 is until the dull days of winter one of the very best pure white sorts. In the dark season the center is marked and shaded with pink; very chaste and a ready seller. The blooms run from 3 to 3½ inches, are of fine form and borne on stiff stems. It is very early and free and promises to be a summer bloomer.

MY EXPERIENCE WITH CARNATIONS DISSEMINATED IN 1900.

By John H. Taylor.

[Read before the New York Florists' Club.]

The century closes with a distinct advancement in the quality of the carnation; in fact, the new century is heralded in by what may prove to be an entirely new class of the divine flower, approaching more and more to the Malmaison type, for how can we compare anything previously grown in this country to that splendid flower Prosperity. Here we find size, shape, vigor, constitution, and with it all freedom of bloom. Seedlings from this carnation already show in a marked degree their parentage, and I have no doubt something very fine will be forthcoming from this carnation.

Boston has finally consented that the spokes and the rim of the universe shall after paying due toll enjoy with the Hub that grand flower, Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson. This is another carnation that stands in a class by itself. This fall, however, owing to its short stems, it has proved rather disappointing. This may have been due to the season or treatment, as I have seen it very fine in the fall in Boston. For a large flower it is very prolific, a good keeper and a very popular variety with the flower-loving public. It requires very little tying, as the stems are very stiff and strong and are now of good average length. These two carnations mark a period of great advancement in carnation culture and come up very nearly to John Thorpe's prophecy of the four-inch flower.

We now come to four carnations which, although they cannot be classed with the two just mentioned, have great individual merits and may prove good paying varieties. The only one so far to show itself a winner is Genevieve Lord. Like one of its parents, William Scott, it is a strong grower, a free bloomer, with strong, long stems requiring but little support, in color a most delicate pink. As a market bloom it finds instant favor, showing the public appreciate its good qualities. Its principal fault is the size of the bloom; with me it is no larger than Scott. As a commercial variety I should consider it one of the best.

Ethel Crocker. Here most of us have been badly disappointed. Whether it is due to soil, hot summer, or dull winter, we cannot tell, but so far she has proved herself a dismal failure. The flowers when perfect are beautiful, but the larger proportion come split, are one-sided and poorly colored. With me it is also very late and very shy—in fact, altogether too modest to give us the benefit of her charms.

The Marquis. A noble name and a most beautiful flower, very large and perfect, lacking, however, so far the necessary qualities to make him valuable as a commercial bloom. In constitution I have found him delicate; he is of a very retiring disposition and believes in short hours and half year's work.

Olympia, a beautiful flower, is delicate in constitution this season and so far has shown herself to be very loath to impart her favors.

These varieties, I believe, comprise the cream of this season's introductions; they are all an advance type and may next year prove to be all that was claimed for them by their introducers. To give an illustration, how little can be judged by a one year's trial of a novelty which as a rule is weakened by over-propagation, we will take Mr. Ward's General Gomez. Most carnation growers discarded it in favor of General Maceo, and even Mr. Ward has only a small bed of it now. Yet if Mr. Ward should never give us another carnation he would deserve the thanks of all lovers of carnations, especially the grower, for here we have what was badly needed, a crimson carnation with constitution, size, a prolific bloomer and one of the best sellers. It is therefore wise, gentlemen, not to be in too much of a hurry to decide on the merits of new favorites. Study their habits and find out if possible the conditions best suited to their taste in order to bring out their best qualities.

In concluding, I think, from what little I have observed since coming back to growing carnations, that the varieties we are growing are like the thoroughbred horse, dog or any other animal brought to great perfection. They need good shelter, and the most intelligent care. If weakened by improper culture they are easily attacked by all forms of disease. In other words, they cannot stand rough usage, neglect or too much forcing. Give them good care in the propagating bed, in their treatment before planting and do not lift or plant them as if they were so many weeds. The carnation of today will pay you well if properly handled, and I have no doubt in a few years the plan of growing carnations will follow the chrysanthemum and the violet.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY

The American Carnation Society holds its annual convention Thursday and Friday of this week in Baltimore. A full and complete report of the proceedings, together with numerous engravings from photographs of the displays at the exhibition, will appear in our next issue.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

There is little change from last week in market conditions. Shipping trade has been good and local demand has also improved so that the supply is being well taken care of and prices are firm. There were heavy demands from the south during the week on account of Mardi Gras, which helped materially. At the same time white continues in best demand indicating a continuance of the call for funeral flowers.

Up to time of this writing the advent of Lent has made no noticeable change in conditions and the feeling is general that the Lenten season has yearly less influence in curtailing demand. On Tuesday of this week tea roses were bringing from $8.00 to $10.00, the best fancy carnations $4.00, good fancy $3.00, and good ordinaries $1.50 to $2.00. It is thought that the present cold snap will probably shorten supply somewhat so even if demand does fall off during the early days of Lent there is no danger of a serious surplus. Of Beauties there are none too many long and medium but plenty of short. Smilax is scarce.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club last Friday evening papers were read by Edwin A. Kanst and Emil Buettner, which will be found elsewhere in this issue together with the discussions on same. Mr. Kanst was elected a member of the club. Mr. Challenge Ventilator Evans was a visitor.

During his remarks Mr. Buettner criticized the retailers for not stimulating the sale of flowers by presenting them to the public in a more attractive way, and it was decided to take up the subject at the next meeting, Mr. Buettner finally promising to be present and give his views at length for the benefit of all. No doubt the retailers will improve the opportunity to present their side of the case and an interesting session is assured. The program for next meeting also includes papers by Edgar Sanders and August Dresel on the progress in the trade during the last twenty years.

It is reported that a leading society lady recently sent a request to all the principal florists for samples of flowers they would recommend for decorating a luncheon table. No one got the order but the society lady managed to make an effective decoration from the samples. This evidence of thrift has made a deep impression upon the victims and future requests for "samples" will be treated with cold suspicion.

Weiland & Risch will move into the basement of 59 Wabash Ave., May 1 and will have about three times their present room. Including present and prospective tenants this basement will have a total of seven wholesale establishments that can be visited by passing from one to the other.

Weiland & Risch have contracted for material for building four new houses each 33 1-3x200 feet. They will have Garland iron gutters, the woodwork will be supplied by the Jno. C. Moninger Co., and the ventilating apparatus by the Quaker City Machine Co. Construction will commence as soon as frost is out of the ground.

By the way, the best price obtainable now on A glass is $4.68 per box, and the best price on 4-inch cast iron pipe is 13 cents per foot.

Mr. E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., is again under the doctor's care. There has been considerable illness among the craft this winter.

Larry Kelly is now in the newspaper business as a side issue, being business manager of a paper published in the interest of the Royal League.

GOLF ALL WINTER IN FLORIDA.

PHILADELPHIA.

Various Items.

Business fairly hummed last week. Stock was more plentiful, despite the cold. Thanks to glorious sunshine, the quality was way up, there being a crispness and vividness about the colored flowers that did one's heart good to see. Prices ruled about the same as the week before, with very heavy business. The exceptions were Beauties and bulbous flowers. The former were not especially in demand, and prices fell in consequence of rather increased supply; while tulips and daffodils were a little overdone, chiefly in the commoner sorts, fancy grades going well. St. Valentine's day helped the violet market in a way that was much needed. The second assembly brought out more choice bouquets than for several seasons. Sweet peas are becoming more plentiful and can be had with reasonable certainty from now until the close of the season. Lilacs have been quite a factor.

The plant market has been fairly brisk. The strong sunshine has improved the quality of the blooming stock, which is now quite profuse.

The air is full of rumors of changes. So-and-so won't grow this next season, but he will grow that, we are told. This is a good sign; it shows that the days of careless business methods among the growers are fast going. Records are kept and acted upon. Another point of interest is that the large growers are more than ever becoming specialists. It is not rose or palm grower now; it is grower of two or three kinds only of roses, or a like number of varieties of palms that we see about us. How far we can safely travel on these lines is a problem.

PHIL.

BUFFALO.

There is little of any great moment happened in this quiet town of late. We escaped the great storm that has visited our state from Lake Ontario to the Pennsylvania line and from Rochester east to Albany, but we felt the effects of it several days, for trains were delayed many hours and in some cases abandoned.

Valentine's day caused a ripple in the demand for violets, several of the Main street stores enticing the love stricken of both sexes with beautiful little boxes of flowers. A large, healthy heart pierced with an arrow was the favorite design. A few years later a pair of pants with empty pockets will be more emblematic for many of these serious cases.

Prof. John F. Cowell leaves for the West India islands about the 21st. His destination is Jamaica and Porto Rico and perhaps Cuba. I hope he will find some good subjects for his fine houses. He intends to take a good supply of snake bite antidote, which, if of the right quality, will also save him from malaria and yellow fever.

We had a visit yesterday from Mr. J. D. Eisele and Mr. Strohlein, of Riverton, N. J. Most of the day was spent at the Pan-American, and nearly every part of the ground was tramped over. There is such a mantle of snow covering the grounds that the landscape features have to be imagined, but every visitor now is charmed with the architecture and coloring of the many beautiful buildings.

Mr. J. C. Spencer, of Utica, and another florist friend whose name I am sorry to have forgotten, arrived this morning just for a look over the Buffalo establishments. As I found at noon that Mr. Palmer was taking them out to his large place their journey will be repaid, for Lancaster is now producing some grand roses and carnations.

This whole western New York will not, I believe, contribute anything to the great show at Baltimore except our friend Marquisee. I hope he will be there to make his "Mark-u-see" (not original).

Among carnations that you don't hear much about, but which is acting remarkably well with us, is the pure white good flower "Peru." Keep your eye on it.

We shall go five strong to the city of forty hills and look forward to the oysters and things very much. W. S.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

The cold weather near the beginning of the week produced its effect quickly in shortening floral crops, which for a few days previous had seemed to have a decided leaning toward "expansion." Even violets felt the effect, and if there is any glass-grown crop that was able to stave off the feeling of contraction it must be the yellow bulb material which is arriving in very generous shipments. But there is no decided stringency in any part of the business, and at the present time (Saturday, February 16), a decidedly warm wave is arriving, so that the coming week will not in the least lack for flowers of any kind. St. Valentine's day helped much in emphasizing the moderate cut of blossoms by its large demand for everything, and its especially heavy use for violets. Florists, themselves, did not send flowers for valentines in all cases, as proven by the fact that one young floral artist printed "You are a" upon a card, fastening underneath a live four-inch lobster, and dispatched the whole combination by messenger to another florist for whom he felt the corresponding degree of affection. The language of lobsters seems to be as expressive as that of flowers.

Various Notes.

The Liberty rose, of which little has been seen for two or three months, has begun to make its presence seen (and smelled) in the market. The present representatives wear rather short stems but superb blossoms. But their appearance somewhat nonplusses the Meteor except in those cases where the better keeping qualities of the latter come into play. It is generally predicted that the new one will not be able to displace the old as a general all-the-year favorite, however.

Comprehensive circulars concerning the March 9th exhibition at the Park street market are out and should be in the hands of every live grower.

The new positions of our wholesale establishments create a new paradox in the already intricate meshes of the business. In order to reach either one of the two of them you can go down Franklin street to Hawley street. A turn to the right takes you to McCarthy's where you can not get left, and a turn to the left for an equal distance takes you to Sutherland's which is also right. You will note it is a case where you must "Let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth." Both of them are in greatly improved quarters, Mr. McCarthy having moved his spacious offices to make more available room.

The need of two phones at the Park street gardens is thoroughly proved by the regularity with which one rings while the other is in use. By the way, Sutherland's old number of "Boston 1270" has been transferred to the line at his new place in order to save us all the trouble of memorizing a new one.

ST. LOUIS.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the St. Louis Florists' Club was held on the 14th, with twenty members present. It was by far the most interesting meeting the club has held for some time. The show of roses was a failure owing to the shortage; all growers seem to be off-crop. J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, was the only exhibitor for the prizes, he showing a fine vase of Brides, Maids and Perles, which was given the first prize. Albert F. Tesson had on exhibition a fine vase of Golden Gates, which was given special mention.

The exhibition committee made its final report and was discharged with thanks. A letter was read from Secretary Herr inviting the members to attend the carnation show to be held at Baltimore this month. A letter was also received from W. C. Kay, secretary of the Toronto Florists' Club, asking for information in regard to making its meetings more interesting to the members. Our secretary was instructed to write our Toronto brothers how we do it.

The office of one trustee was declared vacant and Dr. A. S. Halstedt was elected to serve out the year.

Mr. Beneke read his essay on "Some Requirements for the Elevation of Our Business," which appears elsewhere in this issue. The other essay was by F. C. Weber on "Cut Flowers for the Florists' Use Other Than Chrysanthemums, Roses and Carnations." Mr. Weber was not able to be present, but sent his essay down and it was read by one of the members of the club. The two essays were well received with a vote of thanks.

At the next meeting of the club essays will be read by Carew Sanders, Robert F. Tesson and H. G. Berning. These will no doubt be very interesting and should bring out a large attendance.

Question Box.

The question box brought out a great discussion on the question of "How Are Liberty Roses Doing?" Messrs. Ammann, Fillmore and Guy thought it a grand rose, worthy of further trial, though at present they say it is a great rester. Mr. Guy said Frances Joost was the best pink carnation, much better than Scott and that better prices were obtained for it. Messrs. Ammann and Emundt were of the same opinion. As to Crocker and Lord, they claim that Lord is much the better of the two. In the discussion on Harrisii lilies for Easter, all claimed that the loss would be about 8 per cent.

Mr. H. G. Ude was asked how his new white seedling carnation was getting along and replied that he would have to discard it, owing to rust. Mr. Emundt got up and congratulated Mr. Ude for not putting it on the market to soak some poor unfortunate brother florist.

The next meeting of the club will be a miscellaneous flower show, which will be held on the afternoon of March 14 at 3 o'clock.

The Market.

Business of late has been very good. There has been a decided scarcity of good Brides, Meteors, Bridesmaids, and Beauties. At present they are coming in better owing to the fine warm weather we have been having the past week. Thursday, St. Valentine's day, was exceptionally good for the florists, nearly all of whom were busy. Commission men say the same, they having plenty of shipping orders which kept them late at night. This morning (Monday) found only a limited supply of roses coming in, which were all disposed of in short order.

Beauties are still $3 and $4 per dozen for the choice ones; Meteors, $5 to $10 per 100; extra fine Brides and Maids bring $8 and $10, seconds from $4 to $6; Perles, $3 and $5; Golden Gates, $8 and $10; Woottons, $4 and $6.

Carnations have shortened up a little, still plenty come in. None of the fancy ones are sold under $3, but the bulk of the stock is sold at $2, with the demand heavy. Flora Hill and White Cloud take the lead in white, with Joost and Scott in pink. Daybreak always sells well, and Crane has the call in red.

In bulb stock, Romans have shortened up somewhat and sell at $2 and $3; paper whites, $3; freesias, $1.50; tulips, $3; valley, $3 to $4; Harrisii, $2 per dozen; callas, 10 to 15 cents each; daffodils, single and double, are selling slowly at $2 and $4.

Violets are coming in fine and are plentiful. Best Californias bring 40 cents; Princess of Wales, 50 cents; but can be bought much cheaper in 1,000 lots. The southern violets don't sell well long side of the home grown stock and are sold for almost nothing. Quite a few sweet peas are coming in, but they sell slowly at $2 per 100. Adiantum, asparagus and smilax sold well the past week owing to a number of large dinners, weddings and receptions that are taking place now just before Lent sets in.

Notes.

Fred Hucke has opened a floral store at 4579 Evans avenue. He is no relation to Bill Hucke of Belleville.

Mr. B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, was a visitor the past week. Mr. Eschner is well satisfied with the business on his present trip.

Martin Reukauf, representing H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, is in town selling florists' supplies.

Quite a few of our florists are having some trouble with la grippe, among those most affected are Charlie Kuehn, Henry Berning, John Kunz, Frank Fillmore, Robert Beyer, and your correspondent.

Bowling.

The bowling club rolled four games Monday night, only six members being present. Our visitor was E. W. Guy, of Belleville, who rolled four good games. Kuehn, Miller, Sanders and Ellison are laid up with the grip and could not be present. The first meeting night in March will be ladies' night, and all members are requested to bring the ladies. Refreshments and bowling will be the order of the evening. The scores of Monday were as follows:

CADILLAC, MICH.

About 100 miles north of Grand Rapids, on the G. R. & I. railway, is situated one of the loveliest cities of its size in Michigan. Formerly a great pine lumbering district, the vast quantities of hardwood in this region are now being cut and manufactured, one of the largest hardwood flooring factories in the world being located here.

Although a city of more than 6,000, little interest has been taken in floriculture until recently. The short seasons do not yield profitable returns for the labor expended. Taking advantage of disadvantages, the local florist, A. W. Tweedie, is building up a good business. During the past season he has firmly planted both feet in a very desirable location and is constantly busy improving his new quarters. His houses are at once unique as well as substantial structures. Becoming possessed of several thousand photographers' negatives, he has converted them into serviceable material at about one-tenth the expense of new glass and without any assistance has constructed all his buildings.

His stock consists of miscellaneous plants in good condition. To supply the cut-flower trade he ships his stock from Grand Rapids, and "they say" Grand Rapids florists will have to get a hustle on them if they improve on the floral designs turned out by him. However, he speaks a good word for the quality of stock furnished him by Crabb & Hunter. He will grow his own carnations another year.

One would expect to find great quantities of snow here, but Cadillac has escaped the big storms thus far, and only has enough of the beautiful to make good sleighing. Rod.

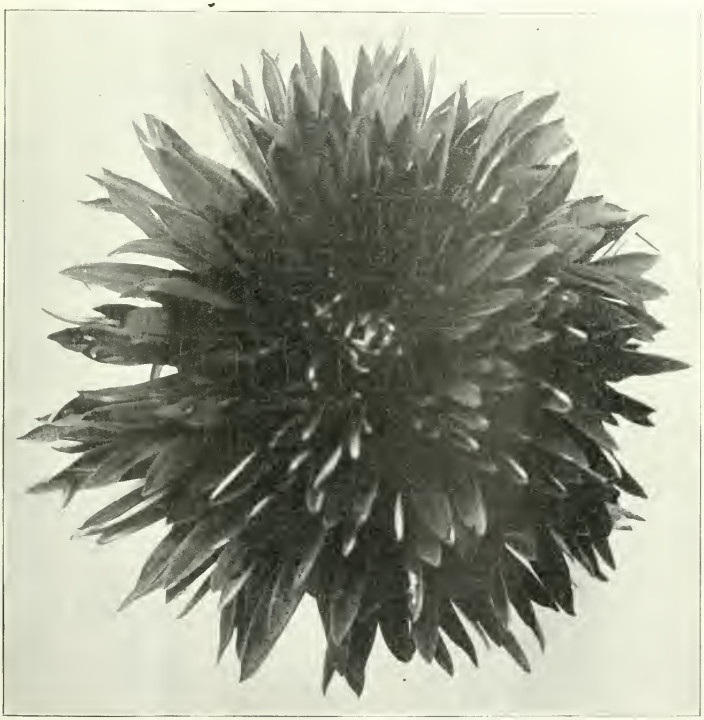
Malcolm Lamond

THE RED CHRYSANTHEMUM THAT DOES NOT BURN.



It grows 2½ feet high and is perfectly self-supporting; beautiful foliage, a splendid keeper and never shows a dull reverse color. Received the Chrysanthemum Society's Certificate and was awarded 91 points by the Philadelphia committee.

Price 35c each; $3.50 per doz.; $25.00 per 100.

JAMES NIVEN,

Thermal Vale Nursery, OAKLAND, CAL.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Various Items.

We are having some genuine winter weather, a heavy snow storm followed by 12 degrees below zero, made the coal bins groan. After a period of excessively cloudy days we got two remarkably sunshiny ones and so strong was the contrast that the pink varieties of carnations faded and streaked perceptibly, even Lawson being affected.

Business continues remarkably good and there is such a scarcity of flowers, particularly carnations, that large orders cannot be filled at all and small mixed orders as close as the stock on hand will permit. White carnations seem to be in greatest demand and are consequently scarcest; same in roses, white cannot be had for love nor money. The past week has been as busy as the holidays, particularly Valentine's day, with this exception, prices remained the same, while on the other hand it seemed, more difficult to fill orders than at Xmas because there was less stock. The only flowers in large supply are bulbs and violets. Speaking of violets, the past winter has shown the value of the Imperial over Marie Louise and Farquhar. It is the same color, requires the same treatment exactly, yet it is of a stronger, sturdier growth, can stand more hardships than the other dark ones, produces just as freely, and far superior flowers on longer and better stems and just as soon as its qualities are understood by the violet growers, it will be the only dark variety grown.

Prices of flowers remain the same except in roses which are $1.50 per dozen as a rule, rather than $1; carnations, 35 to 50 cents per dozen; lilies, $2 per dozen; Beauties, $3 to $5 per dozen, while violets range from 15 to 20 cents per dozen.

There has been a lull in the interest taken in the Baltimore meeting, hardly time to think of it, and it looks now as if but two would tear themselves away and attend. Geo. F. Crabb and Henry Smith will certainly go while Hanna and Chadwick will likely remain at home. Geo. F. Crabb.

OCEANIC, N. J.

Monmouth Co. Hort. Soc.

The fourth annual ball of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society was held in Red Men's Hall, Oceanic, N. J., Friday, Feb. 15.

Rob. Beaty lead the grand march at 9:30, in which ninety-two couples took part. The society's ball is always one of the great events of the season but this year's beat the record of any held in this vicinity. The upper twenty-five of Oceanic and surroundings were represented. At 12 o'clock 200 sat down to supper. Hugh Birch did the comical act to perfection as usual; and when the band played "Home, Sweet Home," every one could find his home without a lantern. B.

NEW GERANIUM LITTLE PINK

Or Double Pink "Mars," one of the best novelties of the Mars family. The first double of this class ever offered to the trade. It is a very dwarf, bushy, compact and extra free blooming variety, not exceeding 4 to 6 inches in height. Its trusses a pleasing shade of bright pink, upper petals white at the base. Unlike Mars or America in color, it has no trace of salmon shading. Its miniature trusses stand erect, 3 to 6 inches above the foliage. It is excellent for bedding, for the border, or as a pot plant. Too much praise cannot be given this grand little pink variety. Price $5.00 per doz., $35.00 per 100. Half-tone cuts will be furnished free of charge for catalogue. Correspondence solicited. Orders booked now for fall and winter delivery. Received certificate of merit at the New York Convention of the Society of American Florists.

OMAHA.

The Market.

The florists are enjoying a very good run of trade, the demand being good for everything. There have been several large funerals during the week, and the demand on St. Valentine's day was unusually large. While flowering plants have not sold as well as during the preceding week, this fault can be laid to impassable streets, caused by the snow of the past week.

Quality remains up to the standard in roses and carnations, though the supply is not what it should be. Almost every day purchasers are turned away because of the lack of carnations and good roses. But this condition will not last long, as good stock is in sight and a little good weather will help us out of the difficulty. Prices have changed little from last week except on Valentine's day, when prices held better, with violets a little higher.

The trade today (St. Valentine's) has been away ahead of calculations, and it was almost impossible to get stuff enough to go around, even after preparing for a heavy trade. The greatest demand seems to have been for violets, and I venture that our litt'e town got away with from 6,000 to 7,000 violets of all varieties; next in demand was naturally the carnation, but on account of scarcity buyers had to take roses, with Maids and Meteors in the lead. J. B.

MANCHESTER, N. H.—On the 1st a fire started in the boiler room at A. G. Hood's greenhouse and burned out the end of five houses, doing damage to the amount of $1,000 to the houses and stock. The houses were partially insured. In the spring Mr. Hood will build a modern range on Hanover street, having recently purchased ten acres of land on which he will build four houses each 200x25. He will also open an up-to-date flower store on Elm street.

DES MOINES, IA.—R. L. Blair reports that for St. Valentine's day there was a big call for red and pink roses and red, pink and white carnations. Not half the number of violets, Von Sions, Romans and valley sold as for the same day last year. Funeral work helped out somewhat on bulb stock. There was a considerable call for potted plants in bloom.

PITTSBURG AND ALLEGHENY.

Club Meeting.

The Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club met in regular session at the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co.'s store on Thursday evening, Feb. 14.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Wm. Falconer of Schenley Park; treasurer, Fred Burki, of Bellevue; secretary, our old stand-by, Langhans, of the Cut Flower Co.

There was on exhibition a vase of the new rose Queen of Edgely, which was donated for this occasion by the Floral Exchange. It brought out quite a discussion as to its color and usefulness for different classes of work, the majority of florists at the meeting thinking it not as useful as its parent, American Beauty, but still good as a new acquisition.

Mr. Blind had on exhibition a vase of Brides and Maids which were magnificent and brought out many words of praise; he also exhibited a vase of Marquis carnations that were much admired, but it is a late bloomer.

Mr. A. M. Herr sent a vase of his Ethel Crocker, which was very fine.

Mr. Koenig, the bulb king, exhibited a bunch of tulip blooms, which were highly appreciated, they having good stems and foliage.

Mr. Chas. Siebert gave a very interesting talk on the old-country method of forcing Holland bulbs for Christmas, which was very attentively listened to.

Several of the members will take in the carnation show at Baltimore.

We have been frost-bound for two weeks, and fuel so expensive!

Business is fairly good, and stock is good, considering our sunless weather.

Subject for next meeting, "What I Know About Palms," by J. Bader.

Mr. Hofmeister, of Seattle, Wash., was a visitor. N.

The annual catalogue of Messrs. W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, has been issued. It contains 108 pages and has a very attractive cover engraved in half tone. In its pages are described and priced an exceedingly varied list of seeds, bulbs, plants and general horticultural supplies. The usual spring edition of the "Florists' wholesale list" has also been issued in which are offered at trade prices a full line of bulbs, dormant plants, seeds and general florists' supplies.

Grove City, Pa.—James Elmer Black, the well known florist, died Feb. 6, aged 42 years. He was a member of the Board of Trade and an elder in the Presbyterian church. A wife and three children survive him.

ELMIRA, N. Y.

The regular annual meeting of the Elmira Horticultural Society was held Feb. 11 in the lecture hall of Warner's Business School. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Prof. J. W. Roberts; vice-president, R. R. Stockdale; secretary, H. N. Hoffman; treasurer, Miss Flora Swift; executive committee, Messrs. George L. Gray, John B. Rudy, G. P. Rawson and Mrs. J. W. Morehouse and Mrs. Edward Kennedy.

An interesting discussion took place on the plans for the coming season. In order to make the meetings as attractive as possible a seasonable topic will be considered at each meeting, papers will be submitted, discussion held and the subject will be illustrated by flowers when practicable. The question box will be a special feature of the meetings. These will be in charge of the most practical men obtainable, and cannot fail to be both instructive and interesting.

A lecture is promised in the near future by Rufus Stanley on "Landscape Gardening as Applied to City Improvement." The March meeting will be devoted to topics relating to seed sowing, etc., with perhaps a show of the newer forms of carnations. An interesting paper by Mrs. Morehouse was read, and it enlisted considerable discussion. The subject was "Bulb Growing," bringing out the methods of growing hyacinths and other bulbs, both in the house and out of doors. This was followed by a paper by R. R. Stockdale on the history of the different types of gladiolus, a flower in which Mr. Stockdale has taken considerable interest. It is intended to hold exhibitions during the year of roses, sweet peas and chrysanthemums, if the public displays sufficient interest in them to warrant the trouble and expense. A membership ticket costs 50 cents per annum and this admits to all exhibitions, as well as to the monthly meeting.

RUSSELL. Again this has proved the most prolific and profitable carnation, giving us so far fully 75 per cent more blooms than Crocker and eight other varieties under same conditions. It never splits its calyx, which Crocker and some others do so badly. After five years' trial, under ordinary culture, it has proved the most profitable and best all-around carnation we ever grew. As large as Scott and of a bright shade of light rose-pink. Strong, well-rooted cuttings now ready at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1,000.
Ethel Crocker, $3.00 per 100. McGowan Sport, $1.50 per 100; $10.00 per 1,000.

R. H. MURPHEY & SON, Urbana, Ohio.

Our stock of Everblooming roses, all grown in 4-inch pots, is more extensive and finer than we have ever before offered our customers. All leading popular varieties for sale.

From open ground, we call your attention to our heavy blocks of Gen. Jacqueminot, 2 yrs., strong, own roots; also such valuable climbers as Yellow Rambler, Steigera, Dawson, Climbing Hermosa, Greville, Wichuraiana, etc., etc.

The new climber, Wm. C. Egan, can be supplied in strong one or two-year-old plants at reasonable rates. It is the best of Mr. Dawson's fine hybrids, and is in fact a climbing Malmaison, of the same form and color, and undeniably hardy.

To clear leased land, we offer shrubbery in elegant assortment, at low rates by the thousand. Hoopes Bro. & Thomas, Maple Ave. Nurseries, West Chester, Pa.

SEEDS.

Burpee's Earliest of All is the Sweet Pea for florists. Notwithstanding their dwarf habit and neat slender foliage, the plants are of vigorous growth and come into bloom always ten days to two weeks in advance of the Extra Early Blanche Ferry, which has been heretofore a week ahead of all other varieties. The flowers are as large as those of the regular strains of Blanche Ferry, and have long stout stems, making them entirely satisfactory for cutting; they are borne in close clusters of three, all facing one way. The standards are a bright, rich pink, while the wings are nearly pure white. Burpee's "Earliest of All" is not only the earliest to bloom in open ground, but is also the most desirable for forcing under glass for winter cut-flowers. The dwarf habit of this variety renders it much more easily grown on the benches, admits of closer planting, and from seed sown during the latter part of August blooms may be cut during the holidays, while with the taller varieties no blooms could be had before February or March. Per pkt. 5 cts.; oz. 6 cts.; ¼ lb. 20 cts.; per lb. 60cts.; 5 lbs. or more at 55 cts. per lb.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.

The florists of Knoxville report that the past year has been a good year for them, although the increased cost of florists' material has lessened the profits considerably. It is rumored that a large wholesale rose growing plant is to be established here and it ought to be a success as this is a good shipping point.

Chas. W. Crouch is building a house for Brides, 150x20, which when completed will make twenty-seven houses from 100 to 150 feet in length on his place. The new house will be planted in solid beds, as he gets the best results this way. Two houses in solid beds have been standing two years, and the only fault he has to find is that the plants are a little more liable to mildew. In these houses, besides the hot water heating boiler, he has a small steam boiler which he can use early and late in the season, when it is too warm to make much heat but when one needs to keep the air dry and use a little sulphur.

Mr. Crouch likes the new rose, Liberty, though it has been inclined to flower on short stems for him. He thinks, however, he can overcome this by giving better soil. C. W. C.

GOVERNMENT FLOWERS.

I have read the report regarding free distribution of flowers by government officials in Washington in your issue of Feb. 14 and would like to say that the distribution is not limited to Washington alone. It extends all over the country. And not only flowers but plants as well are given to congressmen and their friends and others. The plants are as a rule not suited for house culture and do not last very long, so they hurt the trade very little.

M. Dummett's Son.

Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.—Mr. H. A. Catlin has returned from Colorado, where he spent the winter.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Various Notes.

At last we have had a spell of real winter weather with twelve inches of snow, and it remained with us two weeks. It came as a blessing to this part of the country, for we have had very little moisture of any account since October. The month of January gave us twenty days of bright sunshine, yet it did not increase the supply of roses to any extent. There is a decided scarcity of all kinds of stock with the exception of violets, and so thoroughly is the market cleared up daily of all material, especially of white flowers, that the smallest Roman hyacinth becomes an important factor. We don't have to use the X-ray to locate business; there is plenty of it; an unusually high rate of mortality is giving us lots of funeral work.

For the Memorial Services held here for the late Queen Victoria, the floral arrangements were both beautiful and numerous. Arthur Newell being a native of England, received orders for the greater share of the work.

It takes all sorts of people to make trade; the invasion of the city by Mrs. Nation and her hatchet brigade created a new fad and floral hatchets are now much in evidence.

When times are prosperous the florist surely gets his share of the public's patronage and that the love of flowers is increasing was again demonstrated from the amount of trade done here on St. Valentine's Day. The violet was the most sought for, there were plenty of them and I venture to say that better violets are not seen in any other part of the country than those now being picked by the growers of Kan-as City.

Mr. J. M. Gasser, of Cleveland, Ohio, spent a few days with us recently and while here was the guest of W. L. Rock. He asked permission to go to Texas, promising to call again when homeward bound. Mr. Gasser was looking well and we are always glad to see him, for he is one of the few who are ever ready to give us the benefit of a lifelong experience in the business. H. J. M.

CHESTNUT HILL, PA.

Meeting of the Chestnut Hill Hort. Society.

The regular monthly meeting of the Chestnut Hill Horticultural Society was held on the evening of Feb. 12, Vice-President Fred J. Michell presiding. A number of new members were admitted and several proposed. The schedule committee reported good progress being made with the new schedule, and that the same would be issued before the next meeting.

Premiums were awarded the different exhibits, and the judges specially mentioned William Robertson's exhibit of cauliflower and a magnificent vase of Bride roses, and William Boyce's exhibit of asparagus.

The pots of Primula Forbesii exhibited by Frank Gould were also specially mentioned. H.

IN A recent issue of the St. Louis Republic appears a portrait and an account of the life of Dr. George Engelmann, the famous botanist, who made St. Louis his home from 1835 until his death in 1884. One of the treasures of the library of the Missouri Botanical Garden is a collection of sixty volumes containing the notes and memoranda made by Dr. Engelmann of his botanical labors.

MACON, GA.—The disease known as Cercospora violae has been discovered on violets in this vicinity. A report from the authorities at Washington is that no practicable remedy for this disease has been found except to cut off and burn all affected leaves to prevent its spread.

OCEANIC, N. J.—The Monmouth County Horticultural Society will have a permanent exhibition at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo the coming summer.

EVANSVILLE, IND.—Jno. C. Ellspermann has been laid up with pneumonia since Jan. 15, but is now convalescing.

COLUMBUS, O.—Fire did about $300 damage to the greenhouses of the Livingston Seed Co., Feb. 9.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—William Longworth, a pioneer nurseryman, died Feb. 14, aged 78 years.

KROESCHELL BROS. CO.

CHICAGO

Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, Ill. BLUE ISLAND, ILL., March 11, 1894.
GENTLEMEN: Your favor of the 8th inst. asking me for an expression of my views as regards your Heaters as compared to others I have tried, is at hand.

Will say, in the fourteen years since we began, we have made three changes in our Heaters, and these changes made, and built to satisfy the wants of our customers. We have about 250,000 feet of pipe in the two buildings of your other, and I can truly say I prefer it, and consider it, by long odds, the best Heater on the market. After three years' use of one and one year of the with the large business we have done with the success you deserve, I am,
Yours truly,
CHAS. FIREYFOLK,
Blue Island, Ill.

If you want a new Boiler this year, let us give you a figure on one now.

Prices of steel may advance later on the same as has been the case with Glass.

Will book your order at present low prices, and deliver the Boiler any time you want it next Spring or Summer.

Yours,

WATER SPACE ALL AROUND THE FIRE!

NILES CENTRE, COOK CO., ILL., March 20, 1894.
Messrs. Kroeschell Bros. Co.,
Chicago, Ill.
GENTS: Those two boilers you made for me are the best I ever used. I have used more than twenty different kinds of boilers, and never saved so much fuel as I did this winter with your boiler.
Truly yours,
F. STIELOW, Florist,
Niles Centre, Cook Co., Ill.

EVANSTON, ILL., March 20, 1894.
Messrs. Kroeschell Bros. Co.
Chicago, Ill.
DEAR SIRS: Replying to your favor would state that I have in use three of your Improved Green House Boilers, which I have had for five years. Before purchasing yours I had been using the Devine Boiler. Before purchasing your boiler, I had been using the Devine Boiler. I like your boiler better because it has water front and water back, which allows no heat to escape. The saving of fuel is about one-fourth, as compared with other boilers. The saving of water back, which allows no heat to escape. The saving of fuel is about one-fourth. Your boiler is easier to run than other boilers.
Yours truly,
M. WYLAND,
Evanston, Ill.

The Snow Question.

THE recent heavy snow storm in Chicago and vicinity gave us an opportunity to get some photographs showing just how the GARLAND IRON GUTTER affects snow on greenhouse roofs.

How the Snow Laid on the Wooden Gutter Houses.

How the Snow Didn't Lay on the Garland Iron Gutter Houses.
(These photographs were taken the same day and the same hour).

Above are two reproductions of two photographs taken at the same time at the establishment of Messrs. Wietor Bros., High Ridge, Chicago. The first shows the old style houses with wooden gutters and the second shows houses with the Garland Iron Gutter.

At first it seems incredible that an iron gutter could make such a difference, but not when you stop to think. Iron is a good conductor of heat and wood is not. The iron gutters absorb enough heat from the inside of the house to start melting at once the snow falls, no matter how severe the weather. Wood doesn't absorb enough to have any appreciable effect.

If you are interested in this matter write for further information to Governor Roosevelt (Ward). The finest crimson to date. The flower is full, having a large number of petals which are so perfectly and regularly arranged that the periphery of the flower produces a perfect semi-circle. The size averages fully three inches in diameter through the season. It is a vigorous healthy grower, the foliage being of that rich glaucus green color that characterizes our most vigorous and most productive carnations. Awarded National Society's Certificate, 93 points.

Price, $2.50 per doz.; $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

Golden Beauty (Ward). Clear lemon yellow, slightly tinged with pink at the edge of the petal. Habit very similar to Gold Nugget but a stronger, more vigorous grower; well worthy of a thorough trial. Stock limited.

Price, $2.00 per doz.; $12.00 per 100.

Lorna (Dorner). Flower pure white, fragrant, being three and one-half inches in diameter. Comparing it to White Cloud, its parent, it shows a decided improvement, having a more compact and stronger growth. It is a pure white, and also an earlier, freer and continuous bloomer.

Price, $2.00 per doz.; $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000.

OUR GRAND NEW ROSE

Queen of Edgely

PINK AMERICAN BEAUTY,

Writes — December 31, 1900, as follows: —

"Having had the pleasure of visiting your greenhouses and seeing — for the first time — your new rose 'Queen of Edgely' growing on the plants, I should like to say that my first impression as regards its sterling worth has been greatly strengthened. At the time of my visit it was a sight worth going a long way to see, having stems 6 to 8 feet long. With its luxuriant foliage, exquisite color and fragrance, large size of bloom, together with its free budding qualities, I consider it a grand introduction and a money maker for all growers of American Beauty Roses."

THE BALTIMORE CONVENTION.

The Exhibition.

The Baltimore convention of the American Carnation Society was a most enjoyable and instructive meeting and the exhibition showed the usual progress in quality of exhibits. The exhibition is decidedly the most valuable feature of these annual meetings and a trip around the exhibition hall is alone worth the time and expense of attending the convention. The hall was of good size and was well lighted and there was abundant opportunity to inspect the various candidates for public favor and to compare them with the splendidly grown blooms of standard varieties in the general classes. These last were undoubtedly most educational, as showing what the skillful grower can do with the varieties already in commerce.

It was necessary, though, to do this the morning of the first day, as after that time the hall was so crowded with local visitors that careful inspection was impossible. No admission fee was charged, but cards of admission were required. These had been issued in large numbers by the local florists and the hall was at one time so packed that further admittance had to be denied until the number in the hall had thinned out. It was no doubt a grand help in the education of the public as to the merits of the carnation, but interfered materially with the observations of the trade visitor. We are inclined to think it will be wise to in future reserve all of the first day to the men in the trade who have traveled sometimes long distances to inspect the flowers displayed. It would be a mistake to exclude the public entirely, but the first and most important object of the exhibition should not be lost sight of, or the opportunities of the trade visitor curtailed.

Among the flowers on display the Lawson seemed to stand out most prominently and some superb blooms were shown, notably those from Mr. Peter Fisher, the originator. We were more than ever convinced that the Lawson has come to stay and that it will long hold a prominent position among standard sorts. Weber & Sons' Norway, as a white, made a most agreeable impression, and we heard it commented upon favorably by many good judges. Witterstaetter's Adonis and Estelle attracted instant attention, and he had several promising seedlings also. Mr. C. W. Ward made a very large display and his flowers were a prominent feature. Several of his seedlings were exhibited and his vase of 100 Roosevelt was especially fine. Crane seemed to be the most prominent scarlet in the general classes, and Marquis was an important factor among the light pinks, as was also Frances Joost. Prosperity was naturally a great attraction, and a vase of splendid blooms was shown. The Chicago Carnation Co. made a large display of fine blooms, but they had unfortunately suffered from the long shipment. Wietor Bros., Chicago, showed a vase of fine blooms of their pink sport of Armazindy.

Some superb blooms of Liberty rose were shown by Isaac H. Moss, of Baltimore. We have never seen this rose in better form. It is evident that Liberty can be well done at other places than West Hoboken, N. J. Mr. Moss also showed some splendid blooms of Golden Gate. These flowers may be seen in the same picture with the carnation basket in this issue. A vase of white Golden Gate roses shown by the American Rose Company, Washington, D. C., attracted much attention. The blooms were immense. It is identical in form with Golden Gate. This vase may be seen in one of the pictures to the right of the carpet bedding design.

The carpet bed shown in one of the engravings represents the coat of arms of the state of Maryland and was arranged by Mr. Charles L. Seybold, superintendent of Patterson Park, Baltimore, whose portrait appeared on page 352, of our issue of Feb. 14. It was well executed and attracted much attention.

The pictures in this issue will give a good idea of the extent and quality of the exhibition and we will let the judges' awards tell the rest. The judges of seedlings were Messrs. P. O'Mara, New York; Wm. Scott, Buffalo, N. Y.; Wm. Nicholson, Framingham, Mass. The judges in the general classes were Messrs. S. J. Reuter, Westerly, R. I.; M. A. Patten, Tewksbury, Mass.; C. H. Allen, Floral Park, N. Y.

The Lawson gold medal, for best vase of 100 blooms, any variety or color, was awarded to Peter Fisher for Mrs. Thomas W. Lawson.

The Lawson silver medal, for best 25 blooms of a seedling carnation undisseminated, to R. Witterstaetter for Adonis.

The Lawson bronze medal for best 12 blooms of a seedling carnation undisseminated, to Weber & Sons for Norway.

The D. Thomas prize of $25 for best seedling raised in Baltimore, was awarded to C. Akehurst & Son, White Marsh, Md., for an unnamed purple seedling.

GENERAL EXHIBITS.

Robert Kift, Philadelphia, Pa., exhibited his Fairy Vase, stands and adjustable vase holding rods for decorative purposes, also rubber capped flower tubes useful for keeping flowers supplied with water for long shipping and for use separately in decorations. He also exhibited a very fine mirror arrangement displaying the use of the above.

Messrs. Cullom & Ibbotson, Pencoyd, Pa., displayed a new carnation support.

Samuel S. Pennock, Philadelphia, made a large display of ribbons, some of them double faced and very useful and ornamental. He also displayed water proof bouquet holders made of ribbon and tassels that were very much admired by both the trade and the public.

E. Hippard, Youngstown, Ohio, displayed a new galvanized greenhouse gutter, a very simple apparatus and a great acquisition to growers having adjoining houses.

View from the stage.

The Carnation Society's Exhibition at Baltimore.

John Kuhn, of Philadelphia, took the Lippincott silver cup for best vase, 50 blooms, Mrs. Bertram Lippincott.

The American Carnation Society's cup for best arrangement of carnation blooms, was taken by Peter Fisher (see engraving).

The E. H. Michel cup, for the largest and finest display at this show, went to C. W. Ward.

The Cottage Gardens cup, for best variegated seedling carnation, with white ground, not yet distributed, was taken by C. W. Ward.

J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati, O., showed some fine plants of Adiantum Farleyense.

Joseph Heacock & Son, Wyncote, Pa., exhibited vases of American Beauty that were of exceptional merit.

M. Paterson Johnson, Baltimore, Md., exhibited five vases consisting of Bride, Bridesmaid, Liberty, American Beauties and two vases of Marie Louise violets all of extra good quality and a fine exhibit.

White Golden Gate, two extra fine vases, showing it to be a magnificent flower and worthy of a certificate of merit. Shown by the American Rose Co., Washington, D. C.

Frank E. Craemer, Hanover, Pa., an extra well colored vase of Mme. de Watteville.

John N. May exhibited the new rose Mrs. Oliver Ames, a lovely delicate blush pink rose, a sport from Mrs. Pierpont Morgan; this will prove a grand acquisition and a certificate of merit is worthy of consideration.

Mrs. T. Harrison Garrett, Baltimore, Md., exhibited a nice collection of roses consisting of Brides and Bridesmaids and it is especially commended.

Mr. John Cook, Baltimore, Md., exhibited a nice collection of carnations and seedling roses deserving of special mention.

Myers & Samtman, Chestnut Hill, Pa., exhibited a nice vase of American Beauty.

Eli Cross, Grand Rapids, Mich., exhibited nice bunches of violets, white and blue, and of extra good quality.

Mr. John Cook, Baltimore, Md., exhibited a fine vase of his new rose Baltimore, Antoin Revior and Lady Mary Fitzwilliam, a lovely blush white rose of large size, and will make a valuable addition to our list of roses. Certificate of merit recommended.

Mrs. T. Harrison Garrett, Baltimore, Md., made a nice exhibit of palms and decorative plants in center of hall worthy of special mention.

Mr. Chas. Seybold, Patterson Park, Baltimore, Md., exhibited a very large and pretty garden bed design worked out with great skill and deserving of special mention.

RULES FOR JUDGING.

The judges of seedlings had the following instructions, adopted at the Thursday morning session, to guide them:

"All judging in these classes shall be by comparison with existing varieties only.

"Color (25 points). The variety under judgment shall be compared with the best variety of its color extant and be awarded points proportionate to its color value.

"Size (20 points). The variety shall be compared with the largest existing variety, regardless of color, and be awarded points proportionate to its size.

"Stem (20 points). The strength of the stem should be sufficient to carry the flower erect, and the length should be sufficient to display the flower to the best advantage. It is desirable that a stem should be provided with numerous and broad leaflets, as giving better effect when the flowers are arranged in bunches The variety should be compared with that existing variety which best combines these requirements.

"Form (15 points). Comparison shall be had with such existing variety as shall show the best form. Defective form, due to bursted calyxes, shall be considered under this head.

"Substance (10 points). Comparison shall be made with the existing variety having the greatest substance.

Calyx (5 points). The standard of comparison shall be that variety extant having a calyx which most securely and regularly supports the petals and, from its general characteristics, shows the least liability to burst.

"Fragrance (5 points). Comparison shall be had with the most fragrant variety extant.

"Explanatory.—In case any new variety under consideration shall be equal to or exceed the standard in any of the foregoing comparisons, it shall be given the full number of points allowed to the attribute in question. If the variety under judgment shall show in its attributes a marked departure from existing types and if, in the opinion of the judges, such departure from existing types shall give the variety unusual and exceptional merit value, the judges shall be authorized to award a certificate on the ground of 'novelty,' although the variety in question may not, under the regular scale, score points enough to entitle it to such award. It is not contemplated that such action will be taken by the judges save in exceptional cases and, when taken, their report shall specify the number of points scored under the regular scale and shall give a full explanation of the reasons for such extraordinary award."

All awards made by the judges shall be subject to the approval of the Society. All certificate awards shall give the full number of points scored by each variety under each separate heading.

The Meetings.

The Thursday morning session was very brief and the only business transacted was the selection of judges and the adoption of rules for their guidance.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon Mayor Hayes welcomed the visitors from the stage in the exhibition hall. He voiced a hearty welcome on behalf of the citizens of Baltimore, who, he said, were never happier than when extending hospitality to the stranger. He said that the city highly appreciated the honor done it in selecting it for the annual meeting of the society. He presumed the visitors had already discovered the fact that among Baltimore's attractions were the prettiest women that ever lived. He extended the freedom of the city to the visitors, and his cordial greeting was received with much applause.

Mr. Wm. Fraser followed and extended a welcome on behalf of the Gardeners' Club of Baltimore. He spoke of the work of the society and praised the magnificent flowers on exhibition. He said the most important part of the society's work was passing upon the merits of candidates for favor in the carnation world and added that without the indorsement of the judges of the society a new variety would find difficulty in getting attention from any grower. He said the "Divine flower" was comparable only to "Divine woman."

Robert Craig responded on behalf of the society and after thanking the mayor and the Gardeners' Club for their cordial welcome said that the reputation of Baltimore as a most hospitable city was well known. He spoke of the value of the meetings and the exhibitions in educating the general public as well as the members. Referring to what the preceding speakers had said regarding Baltimore's beautiful women he said they were the only thing in nature more beautiful than the carnation.

Thursday evening Prof. Albert F. Woods read his very interesting and instructive paper on carnation diseases, which appears in this issue, together with the discussion on same.

Friday morning President Robert Halliday read his address as follows:

President's Address.

The wonderful progress made in late years, the rapid strides to popular favor made by the carnation, at whose shrine we are worshiping today, is not a craze, for as long as flowers exist, this beautiful creation of the old-fashioned pink will have its place in the heart of every flower lover, and deservedly so.

That state of perfection at which it has already arrived should make every grower, every introducer of a new variety feel a pardonable personal pride, for not only has his work been well done, but it is still growing, and there is yet a wide field in which to work.

When we stop to think of the possibilities wrapped up in this symphony of loveliness, it is with a keen delight and all-absorbing interest that we walk into the seedling house in the morning and note the development of the opening flower, whose label is only marked with the hieroglyphics of the hybridizer. With all its trials and disappointments, it is still fascinating beyond compare to the true carnationist.

Can you tell me of a flower that responds so kindly to generous treatment? From a grower's standpoint it is a breadwinner when properly handled. Can you mention a flower that will give as much pleasure to your customer, that will keep the same length of time in water when cut, that has the diversity of color, or can fill a room with such a pleasing spicy odor, that insidious perfume known to the carnation alone—can you name a flower its equal at the same price?

It has been our privilege this season to arrange several decorations made up of nothing but carnations, with no other foliage than that of their own graceful feathery green, and I cannot remember a more pleasing effect. From the beautiful rose shade of the Genevieve Lord to the dark crimson maroon of the General Gomez, each with its accompanying green foliage, we have produced some exceedingly attractive table effects. Ethel Crocker in all her majesty has adorned the dinner table of many of old Maryland's most prominent homes, and so in our own small way we can note, and with much pleasure, the growing demand of this most popular flower.

Some years ago we stopped growing roses and started in to push the carnation, thinking it was to our best interests to buy our roses and if possible grow all the carnations sold over our counters. Our friends thought at the time that we were making a very foolish move, but time has proved its wisdom; house after house we planted, until our whole plant is now devoted to carnations alone for cut flowers only, consequently, we are now in a position to guarantee our customers good fresh cut flowers, and flowers that will not grow tired and sleepy in three or four hours.

What a pleasure it is to have the society leader come back to you and say that "her ten dozen Gomez lasted six or seven days, and she even then hated to throw them away," so let me ask you growers, is it not much to your advantage to have the retail customers receive good, strong, fresh flowers that will keep several days? Give your store man a chance, send him your flowers direct, don't let the blooms hang so long for the sake of size that they are almost past when you put them in the shipping box; remember that good flowers will sell themselves.

Like my distinguished friend, Mr. William P. Craig, and I quote him when I say that "our judges and our growers do not pay enough attention to the lasting and keeping qualities of the carnation, for it is most essential to your customer and your store man," then throw out your poor keepers, for they will not increase your business, nor will they boom the carnation.

I hear the cry from all over the country we are badly in need of a good white—and I sincerely hope that this exhibition will bring out one of sterling merit. Give us a Flora Hill flower on a White Cloud stem, and the flowering qualities of a William Scott; we need it badly.

I have not had the pleasure of seeing Norway, but I must say one word about our Maryland growers, of whom I am very proud, and justly so, especially of our representatives from Oakland, men who have helped push the divine flower up the ladder of fame with an untiring energy and perseverance worthy of the great state that they represent; we believe that they have introduced seedlings worthy to carry their banner the world over and find a place in every collection.

We here in Maryland owe to our worthy vice-president the fact of our being the banner state in regard to membership; his magnetic influence and honest opinions have won many over to the shrine of the carnation.

Secretary's Report.

Your secretary reports having issued the proceedings of the meeting held in Buffalo, N. Y., in due time, and having mailed the same to all members of the society not in arrears for dues.

Through our stenographer not being acquainted with floral terms the report had to undergo numerous changes, and the thanks of the secretary and the society are due to Mr. Alexander Wallace and Mr. Richard Witterstaetter for assistance in making these changes.

Through an oversight no mention was made in last year's report of the very kind donation made toward our permanent fund by each of the trade papers, as follows: The American Florist, $30; the Florists' Exchange, $25; the Florists' Review, $15. The American Florist has made an additional donation of $10 for the current year.

Quite a number of individual members of the society have contributed toward this fund, all of which has been properly credited to their account. The thanks of the society are, however, due them for their generosity, and also to those gentlemen who aid the society by their advertisements in the premium list.

The rule adopted at the last meeting compelling all entries to be in the hands of the secretary four days before the meeting has been of immeasurable advantage, and will, I hope, be made a standing rule.

All circular matter sent out by the society is mailed to every member, and if not promptly received, a postal card inquiry will bring a second copy.

Both membership and registration have steadily increased, and from your secretary's point of view we start the new century very auspiciously.

Treasurer's Report.

Treasurer Dorner reported receipts during the year of $882.50, which, added to the old balance of $1,010.61, made the total available funds $1,893.11. The expenditures during the year $878.08, leaving a cash balance of $115.03 and a certificate of deposit for $900.00, making the cash assets $1,015.03 at date.

The New Officers.

Indianapolis was selected as the place for the next annual meeting and officers were elected as follows: Wm. G. Bertermann, Indianapolis, Ind., President; Fred Lemon, Richmond, Ind., Vice-President; Albert M. Herr, Lancaster, Pa., Secretary; F. E. Dorner, Lafayette, Ind., Treasurer.

Exhibition Changes.

The society will in future supply printed labels for standard varieties and exhibits in which the varieties are not labeled will be debarred from competition. Exhibitors showing novelties must attach printed or typewritten labels to insure legibility.

It was decided that in future the gold, silver and bronze medals be awarded as first, second and third prizes in the class for best 100 blooms instead of as at present.

The society will purchase vases of its own to be used at the exhibitions and in this way assure exhibitors of a sufficient supply of vases of suitable sizes.

Other Business.

A letter was received from the American Rose Society inviting a further conference regarding holding the meetings of the two organizations at the same date and expressing the hope that the Carnation Society would make a display at the rose show in New York March 20 and 21.

On a motion by Mr. Ward the executive committee was instructed to have the society incorporated so that it might have a legal existence. As an explanation of his motion Mr. Ward said it was his intention to remember the society substantially in his will, and before this could be made effective the incorporation of the society would be necessary. The announcement was received with applause.

Seedlings in the foreground and the vases of 100 each back of them.

The secretary was requested to take up the matter of securing a special rate from the railroads for the next meeting, the feeling being general that the attendance was now sufficiently large to guarantee the required one hundred from a distance.

A question asked was whether it would not be to the mutual interest of introducer and buyer to have each variety shipped direct to the buyer, and whether March 1 was not too late a date to send out a new variety. Mr. Ward thought that unless the constitution of the carnation could be changed it would be impossible to get up a stock to distribute earlier.

A committee, consisting of Wm. Scott, C. W. Ward and E. G. Hill, was appointed to revise the constitution and by-laws so as to adjust them to the proposed incorporation of the society, and to insert a clause providing for life membership.

The special fund received a great lift during the Friday afternoon session, over $1,200.00 being added to it by the contributions of various members in sums ranging from $5.00 up to $100.00. This special fund is to be invested and the interest only used to further the purposes of the society.

Mr. John W. Garrett, of Baltimore, offered a prize of $50.00 to be used as the society saw fit. A vote of thanks was given the gentleman for his generosity.

Sub-Watering.

In the discussion upon this subject Mr. J. L. Dillon gave a description of his system of sub-watering in solid beds. He makes the beds of cement and uses ashes in the bottom in place of bricks or other material. The cost of these solid beds arranged for sub-watering is 30 cents a running foot, and as the benches average about 4½ feet wide, the cost per square foot is about 7 cents. This is about double the cost of ordinary raised benches, filled with soil ready to plant. He says he gets better plants in the sub-watered beds and 25 per cent more flowers, but added that great care was necessary to give enough water without overdoing it. He is so well pleased with results that he will next year fit another house with these sub-irrigated beds.

Mr. Ward said sub-watering was still in the experimental stage with him and he feared the system needed more care and watching than the average florist could give it. He thought the main advantage was the even distribution of heat and that it was most beneficial in the summer time. Some varieties did much better than others on the sub-watered benches. Bradt did well and White Cloud and Daybreak did not. He was not prepared to indorse sub-watering without reservation.

Notes.

An excellent feature inaugurated by Secretary Herr this year was the identification scheme that has been in use for some years by the American Association of Nurserymen. Each member was provided with a numbered button and a printed list of the members and their numbers. It enabled many to become acquainted or to identify those whom they had previously known through correspondence only. It was very useful and we trust the plan will be continued.

A vase of fine blooms of Lorna, Mr. Dorner's fine new white variety, was displayed on Friday. The flowers had been delayed in transit and arrived too late to be considered by the judges.

Beau Ideal is the name of a promising new pink shown by N. D. Pierce, Norwood, R. I.

On Friday afternoon a large party of the delegates visited the greenhouses of Messrs. Halliday Bros. and were liberally entertained.

On the same afternoon a smaller party were the guests of Judge Sands at his home in Lake Roland. After visiting the greenhouses, the contents of which were in excellent condition, those present were the recipients of the generous hospitality of a Maryland home, and the experience was one to be remembered.

A local paper reported that Mr. Peter Fisher had a slight English accent, russet shoes and a cerise mustache, resembling the color of the Lawson carnation. It caused some little amusement and Mr. Fisher seemed to enjoy the joke with the rest.

During the convention there was a bowling contest between Baltimore and "The World," and "The World" won. An easy explanation of this is that Billy Kasting doesn't live in Baltimore.

Baltimore Hospitality.

Baltimore well maintained its reputation for hospitality and certainly the visitors were never better cared for. The hall being some little distance from the hotel section, the local club served a lunch to all each noon at the back of the stage in the exhibition hall. Oysters were a prominent feature at these lunches and they were served from hollowed out blocks of ice. These and the sandwiches, etc., were supplemented by coffee, claret, punch and other liquids. A report of the banquet on Friday evening will be found under another heading. At the concluding session of the meeting a rising vote of thanks was passed to the Gardeners' Club of Baltimore for the many hospitalities extended.

The Banquet.

The banquet was a grand affair in every way but here we met our Waterloo, for a draught from the stage swept around the spot where wool ought to grow and we lost our voice, but we could enjoy the eloquence and stories of others. Mr. Seidewitz is an ideal chairman and master of ceremonies and the telegrams received from Aguinaldo, Mrs. Nation, Bloomsburg, etc., were most amusing and clever. The mayor of Baltimore responded most eloquently for his city and gave us little of local politics. Mr. Robert Craig was, as he always is, at home on the toast "The Carnation." Few men in or out of the trade can talk so feelingly and yet truthfully as Robert. Baltimore's Park Commissioner is an orator with a silver ring in his voice that is a delight to hear and his response to "The Public" was a treat.

Mr. Christie, of Baltimore, was natural and witty on "The Ladies" but we are sorry to hear that he has occasion to think any of them so bad that "they ought to be dead." "The Rivals" was ably taken care of by John N. May and after allowing to the Divine Flower its many fine qualities he still claimed for the rose its pre-eminence in the floral world. "Telling Others How" was too much of a toast for William Scott, especially in his exhausted condition and he quickly wandered to the Pan-American, which he has on the brain at present, and where he hoped he would meet all the brethren. When the sage of Syracuse arose we all settled down for a good time and we got it. Mr. Marquisee was loaded with stories and we got half a dozen of his best. (They were not all strictly parlor stories.) Mr. M. has a big head and lots in it and a most delightful way of imparting his wisdom as well as his jokes. The mayor of Annapolis after wise deliberation told him he ought to keep ducks.

In the absence of the venerable W. R. Smith, Mr. C. W. Ward responded to the toast of "The Gardener" and did it nobly. We have never heard Mr. Ward in finer order. He loyally upheld the profession of the gardener and looked in the not far distant future when the skilled gardener would rank socially and in every way with any in the land. His proof that you could find in the gardening fraternity the counterparts of all the great lights of the past and present age was happy and highly amusing.

The trade papers were to be handled by Judge Sands but that most genial and hospitable man had to leave as the hour was getting late. The speeches were concluded most ably by Mr. Graham, of Baltimore, who responded to "Our Guests." He was original and comical and when he told the story of the lady who said to her guests when they remarked of the trouble she must have gone to that "the trouble ain't nothing to the expense," we realized how hard we had worked the Baltimore boys.

There were at least a dozen talented young men who between speeches gave us a delightful vaudeville show from the stage. All the numbers were good and the chorus was fine. I would like to be the owner of that beautiful tenor or that baritone, or if that was denied me, the power to whistle so charmingly. It was a great evening and a great convention and the president of the society presided at the business meetings in a most dignified and able manner, but oh, Robert, you worked hard, I know you did. I know I voice the feeling of all when I say that there is no more generous, self-sacrificing man in the trade, and none more loved and respected than Robert Halliday. W. S.

Judge Sands was present in spirit if not in the flesh and this is what he said in part:

"In the gardener's art, if you justly boast of your Breeks and Buists and Hendersons, of your Witterstaetters, Dailledouzes and Fishers, we take equal pride in the roster which bears the names of our Feasts and Cooks and Hallidays and Pentlands, and of that great and learned man, big of frame and big of brain, to whose memory every cap should be doffed, gardener, nurseryman, botanist, writer—William D. Brackenridge.

"The first American catalogue of roses was issued from Baltimore, its vivid descriptions of varieties just as entrancing to the ear and as alluring to the buyer as the most eloquent word paintings of the catalogue men of today. Here is a copy of the modest volume, and Mr. James Pentland was its compiler.

"But to the trade press. Some years ago a close friend of mine, counting on my experience as a publisher and on the newspaper blood in my veins, asked my advice as to an investment in a proposed paper designed for the florists' trade, and received the reply: 'Halliday'—for it was that splendid fellow and accomplished gardener, the father of your president—

'you are so situated you must go in, but put as little money in as the circumstances and surroundings will allow, for of course it will fail.' I am glad to stand here tonight to admit that I was a false prophet, that it did not fail, that it was a success from the very start, and that it survives, in usefulness sharing the field with others just as prosperous and profitable, all working to the same good end—the advancement of the florists' trade, the protection of our mutual interests, the education of our members, the engendering of an effective esprit de corps, the promotion of a refined taste, and the elevation of the profession of the gardener amongst other callings which make life more beautiful and more worth living, as ministering to esthetic tastes, bringing wholesome pleasures to the many as well as to the few, whose pure delights are not elusive, but grow by that on which they feed, and are open and free to all, prince and peasant, ignorant and learned, rich and poor.

"These are the purposes, these the aims of the trade press. That it has achieved them all—abundantly achieved them all—I call upon every man here present tonight to testify.

"Who can say what part of the trade's expansion of the past fifteen years is not attributable to the intelligence, enterprise and zeal of this great instrument of progress, seconding every forward movement, taking the initiative in many, affording field and opportunity for the clear heads and keen pens of the Dorners, the Craigs, the Scotts, the Mays and the Webers, of every section of the trade, and of every section of the country—to the profit of us all!"

HYBRIDIZING OF THE CARNATION.

BY PETER FISHER, ELLIS, MASS.

[Read before the Baltimore Convention of the American Carnation Society.]

Mr. President, Members of the American Carnation Society and Friends: It is not my purpose in this paper to go into details as to the origin and evolution of the carnation from its primitive stages to the magnificent varieties of the present day, that having very recently been done by others well qualified through years of earnest and faithful application.

Some of those early workers, to whom we owe so much, are still with us; others who bid fair to become mighty factors in the improvement of the carnation, and who had almost reached the goal in view, have been called away in their prime, and so their work has been laid aside to be taken up by others and carried forward toward the consummation of the ever-receding "Ideal" in the Divine Flower.

The beginner in hybridizing or crossing the carnation of today with a view to its improvement, does so on a very different plane from that of the worker of ten or even five years ago; and right here I think it would be well to remember the debt of gratitude we owe to those men who have gone before, breaking up for us the "fallow" ground (so to speak) and passing it along to us, so pregnant with fruitful possibilities.

And I am glad to say that some of our most expert and earnest workers in this cause, and who have been successful in giving to the trade some of the best standard varieties, are not the "Hermits" in our business, isolating themselves and shrouding their methods in mystery, but who are ever willing to explain to any one interested enough to inquire, and even submit their records showing the results of years of patient effort, with a view to helping others. Such men have the improvement of the Divine Flower at heart, without a doubt.

To get the best results in hybridizing or cross-fertilizing the carnation means much more to my mind than the mere transmission of pollen from one variety or species to another. It must begin with the careful selection of desirable varieties to be used later for this purpose. Select the cuttings with the greatest care from flowering stems of healthy plants only. You cannot be too particular on this point because a cutting of this sort always insures earlier and more continuous blooming qualities in the parent plant from which the pollen is taken or seed is to be raised, as the case may be. A high state of cultivation is, to my mind, indispensable all through, from the taking of the cutting to the gathering of the seed, and ever after, if you would get out of your seedlings the best traits they contain.

Understanding the needs of your varieties and a high state of cultivation, is more than half of the battle, for just in proportion to the health and vigor of the parents, will the seedlings develop in health, size and substance. If the stock is well established, strong and healthy, so will the offsprings be; if weak, diseased and sickly, they will develop seedlings equally faulty.

Early planting is another very important point to be considered. Plants housed late in July or early in August, from which all flower shoots have been pinched back, so that they make their flowering stems in-doors, will be well established and in condition to use for crossing purposes in October, or early in November; and later when only the most vigorous and healthy plants and perfect flowers should again be selected, either for seed or pollen parents.

There are several advantages in early application, such as abundance of sunshine and consequently ample ventilation, which insures a dry condition of the pollen, which is also plentiful during the early fall months. November is a good month in which to work, as insects are less liable to be troublesome at this time, fertilizing where you would prefer to do it yourself. From crossings made during this month, seed can be ripened and sown during the latter part of January. Crosses made earlier or late in spring will ripen seed in a shorter period, but in the latter case often too late to be of service the same season. If sown in January the seedlings have three months growth before planting them out doors, and most of them will bloom in the field and thus give a chance for selecting only meritorious varieties for further tests indoors, and so much valuable space is saved.

I have sown seed as late as April 2d, and had some of the plants bloom in the field by Aug. 15th, four and one-half months from sowing seed. But late sowing is not to be recommended, as many of the plants have not bloomed before frosts are due, and to house all those that have not means a waste of much valuable space. In fact, with very few exceptions, where plants got overcrowded or from some other cause, I have seldom found a variety that bloomed late the first season prove of commercial value.

Early and continuous bloomers are what we need. Only a few years ago it was thought by many to be an impossibility to get blooms of a high grade and in paying quantities from the same plant. Eight years ago I had varieties producing blooms 3½ to 4 inches and over, on stems like canes, that only gave an average of eight blooms to the plant during the entire season. Those varieties were of a strong fleshy growth with broad foliage. Plants of wiry habit with small foliage are invariably free bloomers. The flower runs smaller and often lacks in substance.

By a combination of those habits we have today varieties that produce freely high grade blooms 3 to 4 inches in diameter, on long stems, from plants of excellent habit and medium sized leaf and wiry growth, which is preferable to rank soft growing sorts, as they can be planted much closer together, thus getting a much larger cut from same space. The smaller foliage also admits the sunlight to the base of the plant, and during the dull winter months is not usually subject to attacks from insect pests, or damaged through syringing, like soft fleshy sorts.

The best time to apply the pollen is on a bright sunny morning or forenoon, and the time should be regulated by the condition of the atmosphere in the house; but the pollen should be dry, and applied while the ventilators are opened, as the moisture settles on the plants within a few minutes after closing up the house, and so is not conducive to best results in fertilizing the flowers. If impregnation has taken place the bloom operated upon will usually show it by wilting or "going to sleep" within twenty-four hours. The method of applying the pollen has been so often explained, and is so simple, that I need not here describe it. It should be done systematically, always having an aim in view. When the flowers are in proper condition, depends upon the varieties, some being ready almost as soon as the bloom expands, others take as long as two weeks to develop their organs. This knowledge must be attained through close observation.

In hybridizing always strive towards retaining an ideal habit of plant, healthy and vigorous, of stiff, wiry growth, producing freely fragrant flowers (if possible) of largest size and substance, on strong stems, and in shades of color that will appeal to the public taste, but it must be a ready seller. Self-colors are usually most useful from a commercial standpoint, and yet there is ever a demand for something new, both in style and color.

Indiscriminate crossing is not to be recommended, as it lacks in interest and is not instructive. I do not mean to say one cannot go at it haphazard, using the superior varieties of today and get grand results. That can be done without a doubt, and I also believe the time is fast approaching when through the rapid improvement of the carnation, seedlings will be freely raised in this manner, unfolding a wealth of colors, and of a general quality, requiring the discarding of a very small percentage. (A house of such a strain would be a boon to the average florist with a good retail home trade.) I also believe the quality of those flowers will be as marked in the carnation, as in the pansy or gloxinia of today raised from seed, where they also twenty-five years ago were propagated from cuttings and leaves, to perpetuate the best varieties.

This high strain in carnation seedlings can only be attained by the most careful attention of the hybridizer. He must have a standard to work up to, and he must raise that standard high, having in mind the very best he knows of in existence, and his aim must be to surpass it, no matter if he may already be the possessor of the best yet raised.

Keep records of each cross you make, note carefully the results, especially of those you find to be decided acquisitions. It may take years before you attain the object for which you have been striving, there will be many disappointments, but it is this everlasting keeping at it that brings success. I believe it is possible by carefully and persistently working, taking separate shades of color, crossing white with white, pink with pink, crimson with crimson, etc., year after year, using the product until mixed colors will gradually disappear, and a very large percentage will come true to color. It will take years to accomplish it, but once you get this clear blood infused into your strains you can foretell pretty closely what to expect from each batch of seedlings. This is one of the great advantages of keeping records, and a systematic method of working. With indiscriminate crossing you commence in the dark and continue there.

One's lack of knowledge as to the parentage of many of the new introductions from year to year is often a great disadvantage to one who keeps a strict record. With a knowledge of their parentage back two or three or more years one could act more intelligently and much of the mystery as to the diversity of colors in their offspring would be explained. And yet this lack of knowledge often has a saving element in it, as it often infuses new vigor where too close breeding might have a tendency to running out and weakening of the stock.

We are all working along separate lines towards the same goal and who can tell what a combination of the best results of each individual effort may yet accomplish for the improvement of the carnation of the future. Long ago the word was passed that the "limit" had been reached, and yet each successive year sees a new record established, and so it will be for years to come. Whether we have retrograded or progressed can only be ascertained by looking backward, in any calling of life, and so with the culture and improvement of the Divine Flower.

As we bring this test to bear upon the carnation of today as compared with those of ten or even five years ago, no one will dispute the fact that they loom up as a "New Creation." Yet, great as has been the advance in the last decade it will, in my opinion, be far eclipsed in the next five years. I believe that the improvement of the carnation is only in its infancy. We are like children playing on the beach, here and there picking up a pebble, and yet, beyond is the vast ocean of nature's boundless store, from which we are trying to coax some of her hidden treasures, and our success will be just in proportion to the intelligent and untiring effort put forth, taking advantage of the natural means put within our reach.

The last stage, but by no means the least important part of the hybridizer's work, is the final selection of the varieties to be disseminated to the trade. Always remember that you are apt to be a prejudiced party, and naturally so, in favor of your own productions. They ought to be tested three or more years before distributing. During this period you (if expert in your business) cannot fail to see and note the faults of each variety. Compare them conscientiously with the very best you know of in their class. That must be your standard to go by; you must have something tangible; anything imaginary is but the ever receding "ideal"; its size, substance and wealth of colors can only be guessed at. If you are fortunate enough to have our best growers visit your establishment, note carefully their opinion; it is often worth much if expressed, but as a rule the amount of interest taken in the inspection of a variety is a pretty sure indication of its excellence.

There is always a demand for some new shade of color, and in trying to introduce it do not forget that we are catering to the public taste. Note carefully the opinion of lady visitors of culture as they pass through your greenhouses; they are usually excellent judges. If your pet variety is passed unnoticed, do not take up time nursing it any longer. If it is something that at once attracts their attention it is pretty safe to say it will prove a success. Last of all, take it to the annual meeting of the American Carnation Society and let it be compared with the best products of other growers. It is pretty sure to get scored just about where it belongs, except on general habit and productiveness of the plant, which the originator alone can know. But if he would retain the respect of his fellow florists let him hew to the line, and if it has any bad defects in its general character state it frankly and do not send it out, or do so stating it plainly.

Do not get the idea into your head that you must launch a collection of new sorts on the market every year. Do not even think that the trade expects one new variety every season. Better go slow, if you have the good of this society at heart. It were better to count the introductions of ten years of your best efforts on the fingers of one hand—yes, or even on the index finger—than send out a host of worthless varieties to cause endless confusion, disappointment and loss to your fellows.

The Carnation in Health and Disease.

In the discussion of Mr. Fisher's paper, Mr. L. E. Marquisee said he had found February and March the best time to cross-fertilize the flowers. He thought the plants then had more stamina and were in better condition.

Mr. Fisher responded that by crossing in October the seed ripened early enough to sow and produce plants large enough to plant out in the spring and you could then see three-fourths of the flowers before frost came, and need not house those that gave no promise of being of value. In mid-winter he found it difficult to get pollen of various sorts to work with, and plants from seed sown in the spring were often too late to work to advantage that season. It must be kept over till the following fall, and in this case the seed loses in vitality. The seed germinates more quickly if sown immediately when ripe. The plants also take a better hold when planted early while there is abundant sunshine and before artificial heat is needed in the houses.

Mr. Ward said his experience had been the same, but that he didn't get as much seed in the fall as in the spring, the pods were not so large and the seed didn't develop so well as in the spring. One advantage of crossing in October was that the plants were then naturally vigorous, providing the season had been a favorable one.

Mr. Witterstaetter said he had been breeding from the same colors to get colors true, always making sure that the varieties worked with had desirable constitution and habit. Adonis was the result of four or five generations of scarlet sorts and Estelle was descended from six generations of scarlets. In crossing these two varieties he had obtained no departure from the color type except in a very few cases.

Mr. Fisher indorsed this plan and thought that if followed by hybridizers generally it would result in the eradication of useless or undesirable colors.

Mr. Ward said he also was growing his seedlings in blocks of color and working along the lines indicated by Mr. Witterstaetter.

The thanks of the society were tendered to Mr. Fisher for his valuable paper by a rising vote.

THE CARNATION IN HEALTH AND DISEASE.

(Paper presented at the Baltimore meeting of the American Carnation Society, Feb. 21, 1901, by Albert F. Woods, Chief of the Division of Vegetable Physiology and Pathology, U. S. Department of Agriculture.)

When your secretary requested me to prepare a paper on carnations for this meeting I was tempted to ask to be excused. The fact is I know comparatively little about carnations and that little is bound up with the question of diseases, especially the one formerly known as "bacteriosis" but now as stigmonose or "puncture disease." The various diseases of the carnation so far as they are known have been very ably discussed on a number of different occasions at your meetings. You have as a society been very fortunate in having the untiring efforts of such eminent botanists as Dr. Arthur, Prof. Halsted and Prof. Atkinson, as well as so many expert growers and skilled observers among your members. The reports of your meetings are always of great interest and value. I can add little that is new on the important diseases of carnations to what has already been presented at your meetings and printed in your reports.

I shall therefore confine myself in this paper in large part to the disease which you will probably recognize better by its old name "Bacteriosis" than by its new name "Stigmonose." I have had a good deal to say about this disease in the past and I regret that my motive in saying it has by some been misunderstood. It was not my desire to discredit the work of any investigator. If anything I have said or written leaves this impression I hope to correct it here, and to present more fully than I have done before some facts regarding the varying resistance of carnations to this and other diseases.

The distinctive character of Stigmonose is the development in the leaf of translucent spots varying in size from being just barely visible when examined by transmitted light to spots 1-16 of an inch or more in diameter. The diseased plants finally become of a yellowish sickly color, and more or less stunted in growth, and the lower leaves die. When a plant becomes very badly diseased it seldom entirely recovers though it rarely dies outright. Two types of the disease are recognized; the one with circular spots is produced by aphis punctures and the other with elongated spots by thrips. This difference is well brought out in the illustrations, Figs. 1 and 2.

This trouble was first described before this society by Dr. Arthur. The horror of its scientific discovery and description as a disease therefore belongs to him. The exact nature and cause of the malady has, however, been more or less in dispute. At the time when Dr. Arthur and Prof. Bolley investigated the disease it was not known that the punctures of aphides, thrips, and red spiders produced any far reaching pathological changes in the plant except to retard growth. The clear or yellowish translucent dots which characterize the disease were suggestive of slow growing bacteria or fungi. It was a very natural thing therefore to search for such organisms in the diseased tissues. A microscopic examination revealed the presence of small bodies in the diseased cells, markedly resembling bacteria and which any one might easily mistake for such.

Bacteria as a rule grow readily on various substances as cooked potato and gelatine, and in dilute broths of various kinds. It is possible in this way to obtain pure cultures or colonies of any specific form. After much work Dr. Arthur and Prof. Bolley obtained pure cultures of a yellow bacterium associated with the disease which grew well upon artificial media under conditions similar to those in the leaf. They now took several plants which they believed to be perfectly healthy and put some of these germs on the young leaves and after several weeks the parts of the leaves where the germs were applied became diseased. One might naturally conclude, therefore, as Dr. Arthur and Prof. Bolley did, that the bacteria were the cause of the disease.

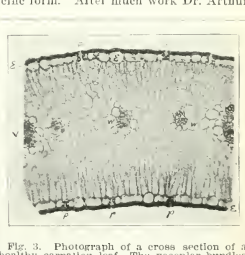

Fig. 3. Photograph of a cross section of a healthy carnation leaf. The vascular bundles are darker and heavier-walled than the rest of the tissue. Five of these bundles are shown in the section (V) and these are surrounded by a layer of thin-walled round or globular cells (W) for storing water. The elongated cells lined with small black dots (chlorophyll bodies) make up the balance of the tissue except the epidermal cells (E), with thick outer wall. The breathing pores (P), or stomata, are shown in section.

The Carnation in Health and Disease.

Bacteria require a good deal of moistnre to develop well. It was therefore a very proper recommendation to keep the foliage as dry as possible and give the plants plenty of light and air. This practice was said to be followed as a rule by very beneficial results to the health and vigor of the plants, especially when aphides were kept down as they were also supposed to introduce the germs of the disease into the tissues by their punctures. It had been noticed that where these insects were numerous the disease was bad.

Fig. 4. The sucking tube (B) of an aphis (A) passing down between the cells of the leaf to the vascular bundle from which sugar and food are withdrawn.

The Carnation in Health and Disease.

Now it happened that a large house of carnations at the U. S. Propagating Gardens came down with a malady which answered the description of bacteriosis in every particular. The plants had been fumigated with tobacco in the usual way to keep down aphides and the foliage had been kept comparatively dry to guard against disease in general. Attempts were made to check the trouble by spraying the young foliage of some of the plants several times a week with germicidal solutions such is corrosive sublimate and formalin, but none of these appeared to do any good. It was therefore decided to force the plants as rapidly as possible, and get what flowers we could from them; the temperature was raised a little above the normal and the plants were frequently syringed. To our surprise, in the moister air with frequent syringings the plants greatly improved and showed less of the disease. The experience led us to examine very carefully the bacterial theory of the trouble.

A great many sections were cut through diseased spots of all sizes and ages and many tests for bacteria were made. The peculiar bodies which were formerly thought to be bacteria were finally shown to be the products of the disorganizing cells. But why should the cells disorganize in such a peculiar progressive manner? Although bacteria could not be demonstrated with the microscope they might still be present under some peculiar condition. It was necessary to examine the diseased and healthy tissues by the so-called culture method, that is, as I have previously explained, to put some of the tissue in question, without contaminating it in any way from outside, into dilute meat or vegetable broths or on sterilized potato or gelatine. If bacteria are present they soon become apparent by their very rapid development under these conditions.

Diseased plants were obtained for this purpose from most of the large carnation centers of the country through growers familiar with the disease. The yellow germ supposed to be the cause of the disease was found in several cases but never in the inner tissues of the plant. In fact in nearly all cases no bacteria or fungi of any kind were found in the diseased spots of the leaves. Occasionally in the last stages of the disease when the surface of the spot had begun to break down, bacteria and fungi of various kinds were found in the tissues. It was evident therefore that these could not be the cause of the disease.

However, to make sure, a large amount of healthy young growth of many plants free from insect or other injury of any kind was inoculated with the germ said to cause the disease but no cases of infection were obtained. Other bacteria found on the surface of the leaves were tested in the same way, but no bacteria were found that produced any kind of disease either when thoroughly washed over the young leaves or injected hypodermically into the tissues. This settled the matter of the cause of the disease as far as bacteria were concerned.

The next problem was to investigate the relation of insects to the trouble and of course the first to be examined was the aphis or green fly. These little pests are present everywhere indoors and outdoors and I do not need to tell you how rapidly they breed and how difficult it is to exterminate them, though they may be kept pretty well under control by constant attention. By colonizing these insects on healthy plants it was soon found that diseased spots were developed wherever the insects punctured the young leaves, but not in fully matured leaves. The greatest care was taken to exclude all bacteria; the surface of the leaves was carefully sterilized with corrosive sublimate and they were kept absolutely free from bacteria. Still under these conditions the disease was invariably produced whenever the aphides punctured the young leaves. The spot did not become apparent in the leaf until several days after the puncture was made, some plants reacting much more quickly than others. Young growths reacted more quickly than older growth, and in mature leaves, as I have stated, there was no apparent reaction at all. Aphides might go on puncturing a plant for a week or so and then be killed by fumigation or otherwise and for a time the plants would appear to be healthy, though later, perhaps after a week or ten days, they would begin to show disease. It is probable that the apparent infections with bacteria that Dr. Arthur and Prof. Bolley obtained were on plants which had been previously punctured in this way

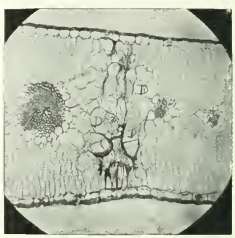

Fig. 6. The enlarged cells in the punctured area. The chlorophyll bodies have disappeared and the light is thus permitted to pass through the leaf readily making a transparent yellowish spot in the tissues.

The Carnation in Health and Disease.

but which at the time the inoculations were made appeared to be perfectly healthy.

The question now arose why should the punctures of the insect produce spots which kept on increasing in size, finally severely injuring the plant? In order to get some light on this question aphides were suddenly killed while they were feeding on the leaf and sections very carefully cut showing how they obtain their nourishment and from what part of the leaf structure it comes. The next illustration (Fig. 4) shows one of these sections. The sucking apparatus of the insect is thrust between the cells of the very center of the leaf, there drawing from the stores of food which the carnation plant had made for its own use.

The insects suck this food material from the tissues and exerete the sugar as honey dew, forming bright sticky spots on the leaves. The result of course is first of all partial starvation for the whole plant, which becomes more or less apparent by the stunting and sometimes the distortion of the plant, according to the quantity of food removed (Fig. 8). The trouble does not stop here, however.

When the insect sticks its bill into the tissues it injects a gelatinous substance, which is left between the cells after the bill is withdrawn. The presence of this material is easily detected by the aid of a good microscope. The next illustration (Fig. 5) shows some of it stained between the cells in a very young diseased spot, s. s. s., extending as dark lines down into the leaf. Gradually the cells surrounding this material become paler and paler in color and swell up to several times their normal size, Fig. 6. The protoplasm breaks down into minute granules resembling bacteria, and these on the death of the cell run together into globular masses, resembling some kind of fungus, though they are really nothing but dead protoplasm.

Fig. 6 shows the enlargement of the cells in the punctured area and the progressive development of the malady. The final stage of the disease when the cells have broken down is shown by Fig. 7. Compare with Fig. 3, which shows a section of a healthy leaf. It may be that something injected with the gelatinous material slowly diffuses through the cells in the region of the puncture, causing them to slowly die.

One of the first things that may be observed by a chemical study of the diseased cells is a decrease of the nitrogenous reserve food materials in the diseased cells. This is accompanied by a greatly increased oxidation due to a certain enzyme or chemical ferment. The increase in size of the diseased cells is probably an accompaniment of this process. In the ordinary healthy condition of the plant starch is made in the green cells during the day. It is later converted into sugar by a chemical ferment known as diastase, and is then used for food by the plant as a whole, being transported to all parts. This change from starch to sugar is greatly retarded when the chemical ferment that causes oxidation increases beyond the normal amount. The food materials of the diseased plants become very sluggish in their movement and are probably very easy for the insects to get. The plant itself suffers from a sort of indigestion, and soon loses in vigor, becoming much more susceptible to all unfavorable conditions as well as to insect and fungus parasites. Careful examination has shown that when these abnormal changes have been once started in a plant the ill effects continue long after the initial cause has disappeared.

If the insects are killed or kept off of such a plant the new growth will be free from spots and therefore apparently healthy. It is, however, poor in reserve albumin and has an excessive amount of oxidizing enzymes, as explained above, and is therefore in fact diseased. This mal-nutrition becomes gradually cumulative from generation to generation of cuttings and so far as our investigations have gone cannot be cured. Stimulating manures intensify the trouble instead of correcting it.

It was noted in these experiments, and, indeed, it is a well known fact, that certain individual plants of any given variety are much more susceptible than others to injury from these causes. In fact, some plants hardly react at all to aphis punctures, while others become badly diseased. The aphides do not thrive on the resistant plants, but increase rapidly on the plants that are not resistant. This was found to be due to the fact that the resistant plants were rich in reserve nitrogen and did not have an excessive amount of the oxidizing ferment, and were also rich in tannin, a substance which aphides greatly dislike. On the other hand, the plants which the aphides thrived on were poor in reserve nitrogen, poor in tannin, and rich in the oxidizing ferment, while at the same time they were of slower growth, lighter colored, and the tissues less slimy when crushed or broken than the resistant plants. To get resistant strains therefore it would be necessary to propagate only from these resistant plants.

Fig 8. Distortion produced by excessive removal of reserve food by aphides during growth.

The Carnation in Health and Disease.

There is evidence also which indicates strongly that this diseased condition of nutrition may be induced by unfavorable conditions of growth. For example, severe cutting back of the plants during active growth makes the new growth that develops very sensitive to insect punctures. Severe injury to the roots in transplanting during active growth also makes the plants very sensitive to disease. The tissues in these cases show the same chemical reactions that I have before pointed out for diseased plants. Rapid growth induced by high moisture content of soil and air produces tissues showing this same sensitiveness to injury by insects and richer in oxidizing ferment than plants grown under more favorable conditions. It is evident, therefore, that unless careful selection is practiced varieties which respond readily to these unfavorable conditions would gradually become so subject to disease as to make them unprofitable.

It is a peculiar fact that plants which are most subject to insect injury are also most subject to injury by parasitic fungi and probably for the same reason. Too much attention, therefore, cannot be given to keeping stock up to a high standard of natural vigor by careful selection of cuttings from vigorous plants and by careful attention to the general needs of the plant. If this were done the prevalence of disease of all kinds would be reduced to a minimum. This, of course, is not a new proposition to florists or to others who make a business of growing and studying plants. You know perhaps better than anybody else that unless rigid selection is practiced stock will run out. In these investigations some of the causes of deterioration and the nature of the changes have been determined.

In concluding this paper I will mention briefly three diseases which have been unusually prevalent this year. The first of these is stem rot, which is being investigated by Messrs. Stewart and Duggar. As a special time has been set apart at this meeting for discussing this disease I will not enter into it here.

Probably the next most serious carnation disease this year has been the leaf spot caused by the fungus Septoria dianthi Desm. A diseased plant from one of our own greenhouses is shown in the illustration, Fig. 9. The spots are usually more or less irregular in outline and bordered by a dark purple margin. The spores form on the lighter central area of the spot within little black bodies barely visible to the naked eye.

The fairy ring spot caused by the fungus Heterosporium echinulatum Berk. has been the cause of serious injury in some cases this season. The spots produced by this fungus are usually more regular in outline, Fig. 10, the central area of the spot being covered by a gray mold-like growth made up of the spores of the fungus, leaving a narrow border of light brown dead tissue from which the name fairy ring may have arisen.

This disease attacks not only the leaves and stems, but also the flower buds. Both of these diseases develop most rapidly and do most serious damage to plants that have been injured in transplanting from the fields to the houses. In many sections the dry, hot weather that prevailed last fall during the time the plants were being moved in was very unfavorable. The root systems were injured in lifting the plants from a dry soil and they adapted themselves to the house conditions much less readily. The main loss, especially in case of the two spot diseases named, was during the period that the plants were establishing themselves in the house.

To avoid epidemics of these diseases it is necessary to move the plants with as little check as possible, give them abundance of air and not too much water, remove badly diseased plants, dead and diseased leaves, etc. After they are thoroughly established in the houses not much damage will be done by these diseases. The danger of a check in transplanting could be avoided by "indoor culture." The advocates of this method claim that there is less loss from stem rot and other diseases where it is practiced.

Prof. Woods stated that the views shown upon the screen were not from drawings but from direct photographs of sections of the leaves, etc., taken through the microscope.

In the discussion that followed the reading of the paper, Mr. Craig asked whether spots on the leaves could not be caused by other agencies than aphides and thrips. Prof. Woods replied that they might be caused by red spider or other puncturing and all sucking insects. Mr. Craig said he had seen spotted leaves on plants that he was sure had never been subject to injury by insects and asked as to the cause. Prof. Woods replied that the plants had undoubtedly at some time been injured by insects and that the results were often not apparent until some little time afterward. He added that tobacco kills only about 60 per cent of the greenfly and that hydrocyanic acid gas is the only insecticide that will entirely rid a house of them. He had never seen the disease in question produced in any way than by the insects and it was exceedingly difficult to keep the plants absolutely clear of them. If the plants were kept perfectly free from insects they would then never have this spot disease. One peculiarity of the disease is a weakness of the plant due to the withdrawal of the nitrogenous material by the insect. The disease could also be produced by any serious injury to the roots of the plant, or by cutting it back too severely. There are certain varieties that are particularly sensitive to every disease that comes along and this peculiarity is transmitted through the cuttings. About four-fifths of the cuttings from weak plants will be subject to disease. It is a pathological condition transmitted through the cutting but not through the seed. The reserve nitrogen in the plant is reduced one-half by the disease.

Mr. Scott asked why it was that the once much dreaded rust had practically disappeared without any special use of fungicides. Prof. Woods replied that the improvement in the general conditions under which the plants had been grown and the less use of water on the foliage had brought about this result. Having the foliage and atmosphere of the greenhouses dry was one of the best means of preventing the development of the rust because the spores of this fungus must have moisture before they can germinate. Without moisture they cannot get a foothold or penetrate the leaf.

Mr. Craig asked as to the origin of stem rot and Prof. Woods replied that there were two forms due to two different fungi. One is a sterile fungus that does not produce any spores. It has no means of dissemination through the air but works entirely through the soil. It is a root-like fungus and grows near the surface of the soil, gradually working its way into the plant at the surface of the soil. This form seems to have been more prevalent among plants that have been lifted from dry soil when moved into the house, but it would no doubt also attack healthy plants. It is a dry rot.

The other form is more parasitic and is a wet rot. If you take hold of the base of the plant and twist it between your fingers the skin will come off. With the dry rot this does not occur but if you break the stem you find a sort of pith inside.

As to remedies for stem rot, if the plants are once attacked nothing effective can be done. Stewart and Dugger have recommended lime. This fungus grows best in soil having high acidity and the lime reduces the acidity. Heavily liming the bench (as much as you dare) will have a tendency to check the disease, but it is not a cure. The only way to clear the soil of all germs is to sterilize it by applying steam for two hours at a pressure of 140 pounds.

Both fungi grow in the fields under favorable conditions, and he knew of no way to prevent stem rot in the field. Carnations should never be grown again in a field where stem rot has once been noted.

Fig. 10. Fairy-ring spot, or ring mold of carnation, produced by Heterosporium echinulatum.

The Carnation in Health and Disease.

In sterilizing the soil by steam there is a tendency to destroy the nitrifying organisms and thereby impair its fertility, but on the other hand the nitrogen becomes more available by the dis-organizing of the elements of the manure. And as a rule the abundance of water used on the soil tends to add nitrifying organisms to it.

Sod plowed under and heavily manured with stable manure for several years seems to be very prolific of the fungi that cause stem rot.

Mr. May said he had used fifty to sixty bushels of lime per acre on ground where he had been troubled with stem rot, and there had then been no further losses from rot. While he had heard it claimed that sterilizing the soil was an injury to it, his experience was that his plants grew better in soil that had been sterilized than in that which had not.

Mr. Dillon had found that stem rot was most prevalent where plants had been set too deeply in the soil, or where rains had washed soil against the plants. He therefore grows his plants on ridges to insure freedom from standing water.

Mr. Scott had noted that in soils naturally strong in lime there had been but a very small percentage of loss from stem rot.

Mr. Ward believed the conditions that favored development of the fungus were found in nearly all soils and that the fungus affects many other plants. He had found the fungus where carnations had never been grown, as well as where they had. He had lost a large percentage of stock lifted from the field during a hot, dry spell, and believed that weather conditions had a strong influence in the matter.

The matter was further discussed by many others, and it was evident that there was great eagerness for full information on the subject of stem rot.

Professor Woods was given a hearty vote of thanks for his paper and his answers to the numerous questions.

CARNATION NOTES.

Topping the Cuttings.

Those cuttings you potted several weeks ago will be making a good growth now and perhaps you are thinking about topping them, which should be done at the right stage, so as to not lose any time by allowing them to make a lot of growth and then cutting it off; and, at the same time, it should not be done too soon.

Many growers are not particular enough about this little operation and allow their employes to do it any old way as long as they stop them from growing heavenward. Some will be in bud while others will have only the tiniest heart pulled out; one way is as wrong as the other. If you allow them to run into bud you lose some valuable time in which they might have made good breaks and started several shoots and at this stage every day counts. If you pull out only the tiny heart the plant is too young and the wood is not in condition to push out strong branches at once and the growth is severely checked. Often, too, you will pull out several blades and the heart will remain and you will have them to go over again when it grows out. The proper time to stop them is just about half way between these two, or as soon as you can see the joints lengthening out. They should have at least four good eyes, well above the earth, to break from; but do not stop them too high.

Some growers like to have a couple of inches of stem between the soil and the lowest branch to help prevent stemrot, but I can see no advantage in it. Stemrot will attack one stem just as readily as it will three or four and the lower part of the branches that start below the surface of the soil soon become the same as the original stem, and are, therefore, the same as so many separate plants. The plants grown with the long stems are likely to lie over in the field after a hard rain, which soon ruins their shapeliness.

There is a great difference in varieties, though, and you must study their growth before pinching. For instance, such varieties as Flora Hill, Joost and Jubilee (which really only need topping once except to pick off flowering shoots in case you want extra large plants) should be topped rather high because nearly every eye above the soil will start to grow, but such varieties as White Cloud and Mrs. Bradt should be pinched rather low and as often as possible in order to form a compact, stocky plant which will not only have many more shoots than the straggly ones, but will also be much easier to handle without breaking off branches when housing in the fall, and they will also grow stronger and more upright throughout the season.

It is generally thought best not to stop a plant when repotting or planting, but to do it a few days before or after, when the roots are in working condition. However, I do not hesitate pinching a plant while replanting if it needs it and I have never seen any bad effects from it. A. F. J. BAUR.

CARNATION ARRANGEMENTS.

It is surprising that the retailers in the cities in which the meetings and exhibitions of the American Carnation Society are held do not wake up to the advertising possibilities in the competition in the arrangement of carnations. The society offers a silver cup for the best arrangement of carnations, and there was only one entry at Baltimore. The prize was won by Mr. Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass., and the arrangement is illustrated in this issue.

There should have been many entries in this class by the Baltimore retailers. It would have been of great benefit to them as well as to the trade in general had there been a generous display of arrangements showing the varied uses to which the carnation may be put in a decorative way. This is the opportunity to show the public what you can do when given full opportunity to work out your own ideas. Now that the public is invited to the exhibitions the retailers should make the fullest use of the opportunity.

We trust that the Indianapolis florists will not overlook the prize offered by the society and that the competition in this class next year will be keen.

Wm. G. Bertermann, President-Elect American Carnation Society.

WALL DECORATION.

In one of the pictures of the Baltimore exhibition in this issue will be seen a wall decoration of wild smilax that seemed to us worthy of a special illustration. The problem of relieving a large bare wall space in an artistic manner was certainly well solved in this case. The design was by Messrs. Black Bros., of Baltimore.

The wild smilax is attached to a wire frame which is held in position by only three nails. The smilax was placed in the frame on the floor and three men then easily put it in position on the wall. The frame is made so that it can be folded over and thereby be reduced to half size for convenience in carrying around. We believe this will prove a useful suggestion to others having wall decorations to execute.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The first few days of Lent have already shown their effect on the florists' business. There is not the rush at the wholesale houses that there was the week before Lent set it. The shipping trade has fallen off and the local demand is rather light. The shipping trade so far this year was never better and it kept brisk up to the closing day before Lent. Prices of course are easier and should the fine weather continue there is likely to be a drop all along the line.

The varieties of roses most called for are more plentiful and also of improved quality. There is no apparent glut of any one variety but there is no telling what will happen in the next few days, as all growers have been off crop at the same time for quite a while.

Beauties are very scarce with demand brisk for long-stemmed stock, $3 per dozen is the price asked for them just now; Brides and Maids are good, but not over plentiful, $4 to $6 per 100 is the best price; Golden Gates are the same; Perles and Wootions are from $3 to $5 per 100 for choice stock; Meteor is of much better color but rather small and good stock finds ready sale at from $5 to $8 per 100.

Carnations sell well and although quantities of fine flowers are coming in the price holds up very well. The prevailing price for good stock is $2, with a few extra fancies, $2.50 and $3. Kloekenkemper is sending in some fine stock to Ellis, Dunford to Berning and the Udes to Kuehn. Some very fine Lawsons were seen at Kuehn's, which came from the Chicago Carnation Co., also other fine varieties of their new stock.

Bulb stuff of almost every variety is slow; daffs and tulips are a drug and plenty of them are going to waste; Dutch hyacinths are coming in and are in fair demand; valley can be bought in good quality at $1.50 to $2; freesias, $1 and $1.50; Harrisiis are not plentiful and are selling for $2 per dozen; callas also have a slow demand.

There are too many violets coming in and the market is glutted, 25 and 35 cents per 100 is asked for them. Californias have the call; doubles sell slowly and southern stock can't be given away.

In greens there is little change; smilax is extremely slow at $12.50; adiantum is in good supply at $1 per 100.

The growers are busy now preparing Easter stock. All lilies are looking well; there is some disease among them, still, it is no worse than in former years. Sanders has a fine lot; his other stock is also looking well. Schray, Fillmore and Beyer all have a fine lot of them, which will be in good shape for Easter. Their other Easter stock is in the best possible condition. Emundt and Guy of Belleville also have a fine lot in good shape for Easter sales.

Notes.

A floral euchre party will be given at the Concordia hall next month by the younger people in the trade. No doubt nearly all the florists of the city will attend and assist the young folks in their undertaking.

Mrs. M. Lueckinsmeier has opened a floral store at 2616 N. 14th street.

The next meeting of the Florists' Club will be a notable one. It is not only "mixed flower" night—and this alone will be worth coming for—but there will be the essays by Messrs. Sanders, Tesson and Berning, which will be well worth spending a few hours with the boys. And, too, at this meeting it will be definitely decided whether we hold a show this year or not. All members should bear this in mind and come and have their say in the matter.

Bowling.

The bowling club rolled three games Monday night. There was a good attendance and some very good scores were made. After the rolling a meeting was held and it was decided to have the ladies with us on next Monday night. All members are requested to be present and bring their ladies with them. The rolling will start promptly at 8 o'clock. The scores of last night were as follows:

BUFFALO.

On reaching home on Monday the news abroad is that they all feel the dullness of Lent and flowers are very plentiful. Our great city had not been visited by any calamity great or small so there is nothing of importance to report. All are glad to hear our impressions of Baltimore.

In our humble opinion the show, for quantity and quality of flowers, was in advance of any previous meeting. It was so differently arranged that it was difficult to compare it with Buffalo's convention. The latter was arranged just to show the carnation. At Baltimore there was more a study to make the whole room effective, and it certainly was. The design of carpet bedding by Mr. Seybold near the stage was well done. The decoration of wild smilax on the walls was most artistic. The group of palms in the center we thought rather high, as it obstructed the view. I know the Baltimore men will excuse candid criticism and I would say the tables might with advantage have been six inches higher. It was inspiring to see the thousands of Baltimore's best people visit the show on both days. Never mind whether it was a free show or not. Such an attendance must do good to the trade. It must stimulate an admiration and desire for the best.

The leading florists of Baltimore are as much to the front as those of any big city, but we noticed dozens of little ones who I don't believe had any idea that such flowers were grown, and I fervently hope that every one of them visited the show. If they did it would certainly widen their vision, as it has in all communities that the society has visited. It was remarkable how the Lawson stood out as the grand flower of the exhibition. It was not exactly Lawson first and the rest nowhere, but as a grand flower, with magnificent stem, it has a clear lead and the result of the show must have made the worthy Peter Fisher feel real good.

Your correspondent was altogether too miserable to take notice of all the good things. Every one wanted to see Adonis. It is a wonder, but as you cannot buy it for two years there will be lots of time to make its acquaintance. Norway, Messrs. Weber's white, is, if a satisfactory grower, ahead of anything; its size enormous and perfect in form. Ward's Golden Beauty is another grand flower that leaves little to be desired in yellow. The markings are very similar to those of old Buttercup, but it is a grand, large flower. We need a satisfactory yellow very much. There were several seedlings which scored high, but your premium list would show all this. There is no finer flower in existence than the beautiful Enquirer, as grown by Richard Witterstaetter, but he will tell you candidly that to make it profitable and produce these perfect flowers it must be grown in pots.

The business meetings were held in rather a cool room for a baldhead, but were well attended. The paper on diseases of the carnation by Professor Woods should be read by all. What a lot we owe to these patient researches. The moral of it all was, or rather the great lesson to be learned is, keep your plants absolutely free of all fly, spider and thrip, for their attacks on the plant is the cause of no end of trouble, which we lay to other causes or bad luck. Mr. Fisher's paper on cross-fertilization and seedlings was grandly plain and explicit, and if we wish to go into the business there will be no excuse that we don't know how. But, gentlemen, be careful, and unless you can afford to face lots of expense and still more disappointment, leave the raising of seedlings to the specialist. There are already plenty of these specialists in the field. The trouble is so few men can look on their own offspring impartially. In their eyes a very moderate flower appears far superior to others and to its faults they are blind. This is no fairy tale, for I have seen it occur in more than one establishment and almost begger the owner because he grew his pet to the exclusion of all good varieties and no one wanted his.

The hard work and unbounded hospitality of the Baltimore men was in evidence from the moment we arrived till we left the fair city, and it must have been a relief to some who gave every moment of their time to our enjoyment. There were many little jaunts taken by parties of a score or so and nothing, I believe, could have been better arranged than that mid-day lunch, which was so entirely free and easy yet so much enjoyed. It held us so well together and afforded a good chance for a social chat.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The shipping trade is holding up very well, but local demand is light and there is a Lenten feeling in the market. The call is strongest for white and prices on this color in carnations and roses have held up to last week, though they are easier on colored stock. On tea roses the range is now from $6 to $8, with a very few sales of extra select at as high as $10. In Beauties the best bring $5 a dozen and from that down to $1 a hundred for the short cripples. There is a large supply of the shorter lengths and a fair amount of the extra lengths, but rather a scarcity of the medium lengths. In carnations the range for good stock is from $1.50 to $3, with sales of poor ordinaries sometimes as low as $1, and even 75 cents, and fine select Lawsons and other fancies occasionally go as high as $4. In common stock white holds up best in price, indicating a considerable demand for funeral work.

Various Items.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club will be held at 40 Randolph street tomorrow (Friday) evening. The program includes a talk by Mr. Emil Buettner on the proper presentation of plants and flowers to the public by the retailer, and papers by Edgar Sanders and Aug. Dresel on the florists' business of today as compared with twenty years ago.

Benthey & Co. will soon erect 50,000 feet of glass, all to be devoted to roses and almost wholly to American Beauties. There will be five houses, each 28x300 feet. They will be connected houses, with Garland iron gutters. The John C. Moninger Co. has the contract for the cypress material. The style of construction will be the same as that of Adolph Poehlmann's range recently illustrated in the REVIEW. Otto Benthey, who has been foreman for J. A. Budlong for some years, will have charge of the new glass.

The pilgrims to the Baltimore convention have returned and report a splendid display of carnations at the meeting and a good time generally.

John Muno will soon open a store for the sale of his product at wholesale at 59 Wabash avenue. Henry Muno, his son, will be in charge.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, was a recent visitor.

NEW YORK.

Growers of cut flowers calculate on two special seasons in the year. The principal one in New York commences with the great horse show and ends on Ash Wednesday, the other from Easter until middle of May. The first is over and all said and done it has been a prosperous one; very good prices prevailed all through the season and the prospects for Easter are exceedingly bright. Prices, it is to be expected, will take a great tumble from now on, for though there are many quiet dinners and luncheons decorated for during Lent, still there is a general cessation of events that demand elaborate attention and profuse ornamentation. It is nigh useless to quote prices or dwell at length on the present condition of the market just now.

The Eastern New York Horticultural Society and the Horticultural Society of New York met in this city recently and accomplished much good on the lines they are organized upon.

A good display of flowers and plants was made at the American Institute show, held on February 13th and 14th. Lager & Hurrell exhibited some very fine orchids; H. Weber & Sons, Oakland, Md., and C. W. Ward, of Queens, showed splendid blooms of their new carnations. Alex. Marshall, of Pawling, and Herbert Spavins, of Mt. Kisco, showed seedling carnations which were certificated, and other exhibitors deserving special mention were T. Talbot, of Rhinecliff; Wm. Turner, of Tarrytown; G. T. Schuneman, L. I., and J. C. Williams, Montclair, N. J.

The carnation show of the New York Gardeners' Society will be held March 9th. J. I. D.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.

The grand annual ball of Hitchings & Co.'s Employees' Association, held at Columbia Hall, Jersey City, on Feb. 18th, was a great success, the greatest the association ever held. About 500 people were in attendance. The hall was prettily decorated by groups of plants and flowers by Geo. Kruse, of Greenville. President Geo. W. Smith and wife led the grand march, with 150 couples trailing in beauty and manliness behind them, and we wish to congratulate the firm, the employees and the committee in charge of this affair for affording a pleasant night to so many and carrying out their plans in a manner creditable to the profession and the great house they represent. OBITUARY.

John Galvin of Boston.

John Galvin, one of the best known residents of Dorchester and a pioneer florist, died Saturday afternoon, Feb. 23, at his home on Washington street, at the age of 78.

Mr. Galvin was for 18 years City Forester of Boston, and during that time raised the level of the Public Garden several feet, laid out the walks and shrubbery with taste and discrimination, and in general made the spot a place of beauty. For this act alone he deserves a niche in the gratitude of all Bostonians. But many were the other deeds he did, and, still more, many were the personal qualities he possessed which combine to make his loss poignant to the hosts who knew him. Not only the citizens of Dorchester, among whom, at 511 Washington street, Mr. Galvin lived for so many years, but the members of the Boston Club, of the Charitable Irish Society, and most of all, of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, will all feel his passing keenly. His was the nature that made every man his friend and made every friend cheerful and contented when he was present.

John Galvin was born in Ireland on Feb. 8, 1823. He came to America when a young man, and from the first to the last of his life had been connected with the most fragrant of industries, the growing of flowers.

The first employment that he undertook was with the late Thomas Motley, who in those days had a beautiful and extensive residence at what is now the Arnold Arboretum. Mr. Galvin was a trusted employe of his, and retained the friendship and respect of Mr. Motley until the death of the latter. He then established the firm of Galvin & Hogan, in Summerville, and they had extensive greenhouses and grounds in that locality. In a short time he was appointed City Forester, the position later held by Mr. William Doogue. Mr. Galvin held this place for 18 years, and did a great deal of the preparatory and substantial work in all the public squares, the Public Garden and the Common of this city.

Mr. Galvin was the pioneer of the idea of establishing floral stores in Boston. The store which he opened on Tremont street was the forerunner of the magnificent and extensive floral business which has made the name of Boston a household word in connection with flowers in this country. He had retired from active business.

In 1847 John Galvin married Miss Elizabeth Gearin, and from their long, happy, unbroken union sprang seven children, six of whom, and Mrs. Galvin, survive.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

There were some warm sessions at the recent annual meeting of the Western New York Horticultural Society in this city. Those members who were fruit growers only wished to ask state legislation looking to the passage of a law compelling nurserymen to fumigate their stock to rid it of any lurking specimens of the San Jose scale, while those who were nurserymen opposed such action, claiming it was unnecessary and would put them to useless expense. There were some tart passages between members of the opposing factions and but for an impassioned speech by President Barry in which he begged the members to be fair and moderate the society might have suffered an unfortunate split.

A resolution was adopted endorsing the action taken by the Eastern New York Horticultural Society in trying to secure legislation relative to the uniform size of fruit packages such as berry boxes.

Secretary Hall's statement of the permanent financial fund showed receipts from all sources of $3,417.78 and disbursements of $459.

Professor John Craig, of Cornell university, presented a paper on "Orchard Cover Crops." The cover, he declared, increased fertility and warded off disease. Using too little seed was mentioned by the speaker as one of the chief reasons for failure to make orchard cover crops successful. Professor Craig said some experiments would be made at Cornell in orchard cover crops with a new covering called "vetch."

Professor W. H. Jordan, of Geneva, spoke on the importance of pure food legislation. He spoke of the adulteration of spices with cocoanut shell, which he said was a great industry. Out of an examination of 2,000 food products in Connecticut, 678 were found to be adulterated and 173 contained salacylic acid for preservative purposes.

He gave considerable attention to the so-called soft drinks, some of which he said contained fusel oil. He called especial attention to the soda fountain drinks which in many cases he said were far from "harmless." Some syrups used at soda fountains, he said, had been found to contain enough analine colors in one drink to color a piece of woolen cloth six inches square a bright hue.

The following officers were re-elected: President, William C. Barry, Rochester; vice-presidents, S. D. Willard, Geneva; J. S. Woodward, Lockport; Albert Wood, Carlton Station; T. B. Wilson, Hall's Corners; secretary-treasurer, John Hall, Chamber of Commerce building, Rochester.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—In the will of the late T. R. Renwick it was directed that the florist business founded by him be continued on the same lines after his death. This was done, but the business became unprofitable and debts were contracted. A petition has been filed by one of the sons for permission to sell the real estate to pay running expenses and all debts, but this is resisted by the other heirs, who claim that the rest of the estate cannot be touched.

BOISE, IDAHO.—At the recent annual meeting of the Idaho State Horticultural Society officers were elected as follows: Pres., I. B. Perrine, Shoshone; Vice-Pres., Prof. F. A. Huntley, Moscow; Sec'y, Robert Milliken, Nampa; Treas., R. M. Gwinn, Caldwell.

Wholesale SEEDS, BULBS, PLANTS,
CUT FLOWERS, FLORISTS' SUPPLIES.

We Mean Business.

An incident which occurred in this city Saturday last, the 23rd, caused us to realize the extent to which the trade known as "Red Violets," or the wholesaler selling direct to the consumer, has grown. From this date on we will not sell any cut flowers to any individual or firm who is not in the trade, or does not sell or grow cut flower stock for a profit or living. We mean by this that "OUR RELATIVES," "PARTICULAR FRIENDS," "PARTICULAR FRIENDS' FRIENDS," will not be served over our counter, or by ordering in any other way. We can safely say that 99 and a half per cent. of our present sales are made to people in the trade, and as these people give us our bread and butter, we do no propose to deprive them of any of theirs.

Chicago, February 25, 1901.

E. H. HUNT.
C. M. DICKINSON, Manager.

DETROIT.

At the last meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club the subject of the evening was "The Relation of the Employer and the Employe from the Employer's Standpoint," and the question was most ably handled and discussed by the employers.

Mr. Payne, the gentleman in charge of the weather office, gave a very interesting talk on how the predictions are made.

Pres. Rackham was unable to be present on account of rheumatism and was also kept from attending the carnation meeting at Baltimore for the same reason. RAG.

We wish to call your attention to the value in our Florists' Manual as recognized by many readers. See their letters that have appeared from time to time in the Review.

NORWALK, OHIO.

A visit to Norwalk found the florists in a very prosperous condition.

I first visited the Parker greenhouses, a neat place of 7,000 feet, finely situated. Messrs. G. W. & W. Parker are the proprietors and are hustlers. They grow a general stock for retail trade and contemplate building large additions this coming spring, to meet the requirements of their rapidly growing trade.

I next visited Mr. E. G. Peat at the Central Greenhouses, which comprise about 7,000 feet of glass located in the residence part of the city. He, too, will build a house 24x100 for roses this spring. Mr. Peat has a fine stock on hand and the place has a prosperous look.

At the West End Greenhouses I found the manager, Mr. Floyd Anderson, looking hale and hearty. He has about 1,000 feet of glass, well stocked, and is working up a nice trade. H. MeN.

The Market.

Business has been fairly good lately, but the weather has been rather stormy and frosty, causing a great scarcity of outside flowers of all kinds. As a consequence inside stuff is having a little harvest all to itself and prices are very good for this time of the year. I might add that a half dozen new stores have started up lately and they to a great extent have helped to cause a shortage in the supply of wholesale stock.

The quality of roses is fair; in carnations, a good percentage of the blooms are split in the calyx. Maidenhair fern is very scarce and hard to get at any price. Acacia and fruit blossoms of various kinds are in market and sell well. Prices: American Beauties, 50 cents to $1; Brides and Bridesmaids, 50 to 75 cents; Meteors, 50 cents to $1; Cecil Brunners, 12½ cents per dozen. Carnations—Hobart, $1; Crocker, 75 cents; Bradt, 50 cents; Hill, 35 to 50 cents; Scott, 25 cents; mixed fancies, 35 to 50 cents; Portia, 25 cents per doz. Violets—Princess of Wales, 50 cents to $1.25; Californias, 50 to 75 cents; Marie Louise, 75 cents to $1 per dozen. Daffodils, single, 15 to 20 cents; double, 10 to 15 cents per dozen; paper whites, 50 to 75 cents per 100; Roman hyacinths, 20 to 25 cents; freesias, 15 to 20 cents; valley, 35 to 50 cents; Harrisii, $3.50 to $4 per dozen. Cattleyas, 50 cents per bloom.

Various Notes.

V. Matraia has opened up a new store at 118 Powell street.

Pouyal of Polk street will move shortly one block south of his present location.

Stevenson made a handsome crown containing 100 dozen single daffodils, which was used at the memorial services held in San Francisco recently on the occasion of the death of Queen Victoria.

Ben Black, lately in the employ of E. Laccazzette, Fourteenth street, Oakland, has opened a floral establishment right alongside of his former employer. It is needless to say that "they never speak as they pass by." Mr. Black's address is 420 Fourteenth street.

Mr. E. Gill has just finished one new propagating house, 20x45, and is making plans to build a carnation house 25x150. Mr. Gill reports that a Portuguese gentleman came into his store one day last week and ordered a floral piece to be lettered thus: "Josephine Silva, 5 years old, died of diphtheria." The gentleman from Portugal took Mr. Gill's advice and dropped out the word "diphtheria."

Mrs. J. McCarthy has opened a store at the Narrow Gauge depot, Fourteenth street, Oakland, and will do a catering and florist business.

D'Artagon & Baretta, lately of the "Bon Marche," Salter street, San Francisco, have opened up a new store under the title of "The American Florists," 1064 Washington street, Oakland. They are carrying a fine stock and are in a good location.

Mr. J. Gilmore, Elmhurst, is building three new houses, 16x300, for roses and carnations.

ST. PAUL.

Dear Mr. Review:—It is six months past since I have reported to you of the Twin City florists' picnic, and the boys think it about time to let you know that we are all still alive here and are enjoying a good winter business. La grippe, in combination with other diseases, smashes many lives without mercy, as Carrie Nation did the beer glasses down in Kansas. Funeral orders every day at all the stores, and consequently good white stock at times is scarce. During carnival times roses of shades were in great demand and the supply insufficient; even today, in spite of Lent, demand for cut roses is unabated.

A week ago Saturday friends of P. Holm, senior partner of the firm of Holm & Olson, gave him a surprise party at his residence; some fifty people were present, enjoying themselves in dancing and singing, and the men folks, mostly florists, in killing a barrel of beer. A present in the form of a nice piece of furniture was given to Pete and his lovely little wife.

The florists just now are hustling, bustling, rustling to get things in shape for Easter.

Our violet specialists, Haugen & Swanson, are wearing happy faces; their violets are in full crop; good sized flowers of the deepest blue. About the end of November they were a sorry looking lot, but through good care and constant watching they have picked up wonderfully.

Henry Puvogel had the finest lot of Chinese primroses ever seen in this city, some 2,000 plants, and they sell well.

Christ Hansen brings the best carnations to market. Seeger is enjoying big crops of roses from his new range of rose houses.

Christ Bussjaeger is planning for new additions this summer.

Chas. Vogt, our "dandy florist," is still looking for a "frau." And there are a half dozen more bachelor florists in this city—H. Strehlow, Johnnie Fleischer, Max Bussjaeger, Johannes Nillsen, etc., etc.—who are all good looking fellows, of good habits, and business owners.

I nearly forgot to tell about our latest boom in the florists' circle—that is, the coal boom; lignite, yes, sir, Dakota lignite at $3.40 per ton, and smokeless and sootless, which means much for us. It burns freely and is easy and clean to handle. The ashes look like dry sand. However, it was put on the market too late for this season, as most of our florists had already made contracts for coal by the 1st of September. Cheap coal will be a great thing for the Twin Cities; last year we paid $5.50 for Youghiogheny and, by Jove, after paying the coal bills there wasn't much left.

With greeting and regards from all of us, Christ. Bussjaeger.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

At a meeting of the Chrysanthemum Society of America, held at Baltimore last week, it was decided to offer the society's cup this year for the best 10 blooms of any variety shown at the coming exhibition of the New York Florists' Club in New York City.

It was announced that the sum of $100 had been offered as a special prize to be awarded under the auspices of the society at the New York exhibition, and Messrs. A. Herrington, J. N. May and P. O'Mara were appointed to arrange with the New York Club as to the classes in which it was to be offered.

In the absence of the president Mr. E. Dailledouze presided at the meeting.

HYDRANGEAS.

At what temperature should Hydrangea Otaksa be kept in order to have them in by Easter? The buds are now (Feb. 15) just beginning to show.

W. L.

Any advice I can give on the above will be rather behind time but if the hydrangeas were showing buds on the 15th of February I would consider them in good condition for Easter. The temperature of 60 degrees at night ought to bring them along very well. However, so very much depends on the weather. But you have got them under control and they should not need extreme forcing.

W. S.

FOR SALE OR EXCHANGE—R. Cuttings, 1 cent. New and selected Coleus, Ageratum (Gurney, Pauline), Parlor Ivy, Verbenas, Mum's (Frank Hardy, Simpson, Dailledouze, Pres. BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

Trade is only fairly good. Surely it has not averaged up to a conservative estimate for the date since the beginning of the season. Scarcity of goods is all that has kept prices right, and now that warmer weather and Lent are upon us the probable results are not pleasant to contemplate. Everything has begun to come more plentifully except customers, cash and fine, white flowers. Roman hyacinths being the best example of the kind in any quantity.

Various Items.

The firm of Sheridan & Dichl, of Bromfield street, has closed its doors.

Mr. Lawrence Flynn, better known as "Larry," has severed his business connection with Geo. A. Sutherland in order to establish himself in the same line on Ordway place, opposite the building formerly occupied by Galvin & Co. It is generally understood that Mr. Lawrence Cotter will be interested in the venture. The "long and short of it," therefore, is most conspicuous in the stature of the two Larrys. But a short man may have a long head; a long man can not be "short," and brains and "long green" make a powerful combination. May the first new move of the century keep pace with all progress. J. S. Manter.

Bellefontaine, O.—The potting shed put up by Poole & Purllant to replace the one destroyed by fire a few weeks ago is about completed and is a big improvement over the old one. It is 12x38x12 with a good storeroom above and a cellar the entire length of the building. Their loss was not so much by fire as by frost, as they could not keep up enough steam to keep the frost out, as the ends of the houses were exposed and the boiler out in the open air, and during the few cold nights following the fire they lost nearly all their plants.

Cedar Rapids, Ia.—Arthur P. Krebs died at his home in Rose Hill Feb. 8, aged 40 years.

DENVER, COLO.

Business has been fully up to the standard the past two weeks and Lent has made little difference. The social season came to a close with quite a number of dinners which helped trade along, the presence of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee in town for a couple of days was accountable for the use of a great many flowers, as he was well entertained.

We look with interest for the report of the carnation convention. We did not have a representative there, but will try to learn what we can from the papers. Wonder if you had a Miss Anita Carre "trip" the foothights and sing "I'd Leave My Happy Home" to the baldheads in the front row, and then receive a bunch of five hundred carnations for the song, "a la Buffalo."

Mr. Valentine is still confined to the hospital, but is convalescing so nicely that it is expected he will be able to go to his home by Tuesday.

Recent visitors were Arnold Ringier, Jos. Rolker, A. L. Vaughan and Mr. C. Cropp. ROCKY.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

During the past month trade has been brisk and steady; funeral work of a good class plentiful.

In roses, Maids, Brides and Meteors have been plentiful and good; Beauties scarce. Carnations are a little scarce but of excellent quality. Plenty of bulbous stock. Lilies are a splendid crop and promise to be in in quantity at Easter. The disease is not so prevalent as in former years. Roses and carnations are showing up for a heavy cut about Easter.

The Van Bochove boys are cutting some high grade Maids, Brides and Meteors.

It is rumored that some of the firms here are to add largely to their plants this spring.

Celery men are beginning to sow their seed for the first crop. Looks like spring, don't it? RIBES.

Hot Springs, Ark., Without Change.

You can leave Chicago in a through sleeper any day on the Wabash Fast Day Express at 11:03 A. M., and be in Hot Springs next morning at 9:00 o'clock. This is the only line via St. Louis operating a through sleeper from Chicago to Hot Springs.

Write for illustrated booklet giving full information about this popular health resort. Rates will be quoted and sleeping car reservations made upon request.

RUSSELL. Again this has proved the most prolific and profitable carnation, giving us so far fully 25 per cent more blooms than Crocker and eight other varieties under same conditions. It never splits its calyx, which Crocker and some others do so badly. After five years' trial, under ordinary culture, it has proved the most profitable and best all-around carnation we ever grew. As large as Scott and of a bright shade of light rose-pink. Strong, well-rooted cuttings now ready at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1,000.

Ethel Crocker, $2.00 per 100. McGowan Sport, $1.50 per 100; $10.00 per 1,000.

R. H. MURPHEY & SON, Urbana, Ohio.

Our stock of [illegible] in 4-inch pots, is more extensive [illegible] we have ever before offered our [illegible]. All leading popular varieties [illegible].

From open ground, we call [illegible] attention to our heavy blocks of Gen. Ja[illegible] strong, own roots; also such [illegible] as Yellow Rambler, Steigera, D[illegible], [illegible] ing Hermosa, Greville, Wichuraia[illegible].

The new climber, Wm. C. Egan, [illegible] plied in strong one or two-year-old [illegible] at reasonable rates. It is the best of M[illegible] son's fine hybrids, and is in fact a climbing Malmaison, of the same form and [illegible] undeniably hardy.

To clear leased land, we offer shrubbery in elegant assortment, at low rates by the thousand. Hoopes Bro. & Thomas, Maple Ave. Nurseries, West Chester, Pa.

SEEDS.

Burpee's Earliest of All is the Sweet Pea for florists. Notwithstanding their dwarf habit and neat slender foliage, the plants are of vigorous growth and come into bloom always ten days to two weeks in advance of the Extra Early Blanche Ferry, which has been heretofore a week ahead of all other varieties. The flowers are as large as those of the regular strains of Blanche Ferry, and have long stout stems, making them entirely satisfactory for cutting: they are borne in close clusters of three, all facing one way. The standards are a bright, rich pink, while the wings are nearly pure white. Burpee's "Earliest of All" is not only the earliest to bloom in open ground, but is also the most desirable for forcing under glass for winter cut-flowers. The dwarf habit of this variety renders it much more easily grown on the benches, admits of closer planting, and from seed sown during the latter part of August blooms may be cut during the holidays, while with the taller varieties no blooms could be had before February or March. Per pkt. 5 cts.; oz. 6 cts.; ¼ lb. 20 cts.; per lb. 60cts.; 5 lbs. or more at 55 cts. per lb.

KRICK'S "PERFECT" ADJUSTABLE A[illegible]

FLOWER POT STAND.

This Stand is adjustable and folding (see cut) and can be raised from 24 to 40 inches.

The top of Stand is furnished with an indurated fibre saucer, and plants can be securely tilted at an angle by means of a curved rest laid under the flower pot, this is particularly handy when plants are used in decorations, etc. The Stand can be erected and folded in a moment, and when folded quite a number can be packed together, taking comparatively little space in wagon, leaving a greater amount of room for plants, etc.

These Stands are finely finished in Aluminum and Gilt.

No. 2, including a 1-inch Saucer and Tilting Rest, price $2.00.

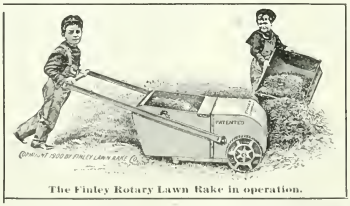
If you have a Lawn

You will want a FINLEY ROTARY LAWN RAKE this spring and you ought to have it early. It will not only save lots of work but it will do it better than it can possibly be done by hand. It will enable you to clean your lawn easily and effectively in the spring and to keep it clean all summer. It will enable you to kill out crab grass and other pests. It takes up grass, either long or short, twigs and loose litter of any kind, stones included, that a hand rake would not touch. It will save its cost in sixty days on any good lawn.



The Finley Rotary Lawn Rake in operation.

Price $12.00. IT WAS GIVEN A CERTIFICATE OF MERIT by the Society of American Florists at the New York Convention, the judges reporting that they "Believe it to be far superior to anything else in the market."

QUEEN OF EDGELY

PINK AMERICAN BEAUTY.

"We are convinced that this variety is a valuable addition to the list of forcing roses, being in every respect, except color, the exact counterpart of the American Beauty. The color is a beautiful bright pink, which is good, even in the full flowers. The fragrance is also as fine as that of Beauty, and the exhibited blooms showed remarkable vigor."

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

Flowers as Valentines.

From all over the country come reports of an extra demand for violets on Valentine day. There was an extra call for these flowers in New York that day, but some of the leading florists offered many specially arranged baskets and boxes of forget-me-nots, valley, etc., which sold exceedingly well. Thorley had his window filled with small hampers which were tied across the lid with broad ribbon bows, spray of roses or other flowers in the bow. They looked very "catchy" and sold well. Other Broadway florists had small colored handle baskets tied with ribbon and filled with small flowers; these baskets were hung in garlands the full length of the windows and made a very attractive showing. Many made special preparations for Valentine day in this way and had the offerings neatly marked "Floral Valentines," and though more will say the sales were very extra still they feel repaid in many ways for the expense and trouble they went to.

Plants.

Many of the New York stores are making special displays of flowering plants in their windows at present. These plants seem to be the forerunners of what we are to expect for Easter.

The second and third rate stores are again making French paper dolls out of azaleas, etc., and the crimes committed in the name of art in these places are as bad as ever. Anyone of an artistic temperament must needs wear blue glasses and close his teeth when passing the windows or visiting the stores of some who claim to be floral artists. The man or woman who chokes up and entirely obliterates the beauty of a well grown plant with crepe paper is an enemy to the florists' trade.

We don't wish to be misunderstood, Mr. Editor; moderation in crepe paper is like moderation in drink, excess is vile. Many hundreds of plants die prematurely because of lack of water on account of dread of wetting the paper. A good plant in a clean pot needs very little fixing up, but there are many plants which though ever so well grown, need some trimming to sell them, and the first class stores this year will either make them up in baskets or use the new matting which can be made very artistic.

This matting is made of wood shavings and is dyed in a few pleasing colors, and some abominable ones. It was introduced last fall by a New York basket maker and though its adaptability was up till recently only recognized by the few, it promises to be generally used this Easter. It takes the place of crepe paper and is not damaged by water as easily as that material. Some first class stores have at the present time this matting in use, and it is far superior to the old material. We shall give you some illustrations of it before Easter.

For Easter.

There does not seem to be anything specially new in sight for Easter at present (and we cannot see how it can change). There will be nothing but the same old kind of stock to offer. Azaleas will be more abundant, and some growers must have either been bunco'ed or else they show ignorance on the varieties of azaleas they should offer to the American public. Variety may be the spice of life but it doesn't always produce the wherewith to sustain life. There are one or two varieties of azaleas specially valuable to the American trade, and each year it seems more difficult to get these favorites, unless you buy poorer varieties with them, or pay extra.

Everything points to a record breaking Easter and we fancy that retailers will be able to dispose of enormous quantities of plants if they are in good condition and are presented properly. But you need not wait till Easter; many a good sale can be made during Lent. No store should be without its sample basket of plants or flowers; there's no telling who'll buy or when a thing will be sold. If you are out for business be always prepared for it and have some enticing basket before the nose or at least the eye of your customer.

Made up baskets of flowering plants will more than ever be the leading feature in the principal New York stores this Easter. Lent, after all, is not the wet blanket to the florist business it is supposed to be. True, there is an abundance of stock left over on the market, but then there should be plenty of stock at this time of the year; it would scarcely do to have at all times flowers as scarce and as dear as they are in December and January.

Lenten Demands.

There will be quite a demand for flowers during Lent, but it will be more in the nature of an undercurrent—a somewhat subdued light, which the florist can help to protect by an exercise of diplomacy, for as a rule people who entertain during this season (and many a large affair is booked to come off) don't want the matter advertised; they naturally expect the florist and caterers to keep quiet and not give information to newspapers. We have known many a florist to lose good customers on account of someone in the store giving reports to sensational newspapers which exaggerate and ridicule the events. Some people love to be advertised other's don't, the florist needs be careful, more especially during Lent.

At the present condition of the market nearly all can afford to be a little more generous than circumstances have permitted for several months past. We are prone to imagine it has been a somewhat hard season for small retail florists whose entire trade almost depends upon those who could not afford to pay high prices—and prices have been very high this winter. Now, however, opportunities will occur where all may give a few flowers where they will do good, or will be enabled to give their customers an apparent value for their money in the way of well filled funeral designs or in other orders. Grasp any and every possible chance when flowers are cheap to dispel lingering memories of having been overcharged in the past, for as with yourself, so with your customer, both are human.

Boston Ferns.

It seems hard to understand how with all the growers around New York it is impossible at present to find any well-grown Boston ferns, especially in pans. We had occasion last week to seek a 10 or 12-inch pan of this fern and applied to all the specialists for it, and was informed that they were all sold out. This is an annual occurrence; there is always an abundance of this fern in the early part of the season and the growers are always in a hurry to get rid of them; no provision is made for this part of the season, and the result is that there is considerable difficulty in filling an order. Some wise grower will perhaps take a hint and provide for this time of the year.

Other Plants.

Primula chinensis sold well in this section of the country this season. Once in a while a few extra fine named varieties were seen. One grower had his grown three or four in pans and in separate colors and they went quickly. This plant is as a rule too small to offer singly; many were sold made up in baskets of four to six, but the best way to offer them is grown in pans. You might mix some, but they are apt to sell quicker in separate colors. Primroses of all sections will sell well this Easter if presented properly. The one offered by Dreer a few weeks ago is a grand thing and a great favorite around New York.

Variegated cyperus is a thing that sells well; more of it should be seen. Some are looking for camellias with but poor results. Anyone with a stock of these old time favorites in flower for Easter would sell them very quickly; we might see them offered next year. People who have acres of glass and who are continually looking for "new things" can with profit look back and pick up some of the old things.

Flowering Shrubs.

Flowering shrubs and fruit trees such as forsythia, Cydonia japonica, spireas, almonds, peach and lilac have been coming in for some time and have been used extensively in decorative work. This kind of material will of course be popular for spring weddings. An arbor of Japan quince with an interlacing of growing-like Cusin roses is fit for any queen to be married under.

Some very pretty wreaths have recently been made from Florida magnolia foliage. Use large leaves for ground work and finish off with small ones.

For a time it was quite difficult to get any respectable looking outdoor ferns. Dealers in that kind of stock blamed the weather. We were always under the impression that weather could have no effect on the stock as it is preserved.

Leucothoe sprays, both bronze and green, are being much used in New York for a background to flat bunches or as sprays in cut flower boxes. They are very useful with large flowers.

IVERA.

POINTS TO RETAILERS.

At the last meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club Mr. E. Buettner led in a discussion as to what the retailers should do to increase the sale of flowers. He sharply criticised the window displays of most retailers and said the vases of flowers of all colors were usually jumbled together without any taste whatever. If a customer comes in several of these vases of flowers are set before her to select from, and the seller depends entirely upon the quality of the stock to sell it. He held that sales could be much enlarged if stock was presented in a more attractive manner and instanced the expansion in the trade in plants, since some effort had been directed toward presenting them to customers in such a way as to bring out and enhance their decorative value.

Cyclamen Grandiflora Fimbriatum.

He spoke of the average bunch of violets as resembling Kruger with his whiskers and scored the retailers for being content to offer violets to their customers bunched just as they came from the growers. He said the growers were not supposed to be artists, but the retailers ought to be, and should make some effort to show it.

He mentioned the great care given by dry goods merchants to displaying their wares to best advantage, and the fact that their best talent is devoted to the arrangement of their window displays in a way to attract buyers into the store. He felt that the great majority of the retail florists were woefully negligent of their opportunities in this respect.

He was positive that two bunches of flowers could be sold where one is sold now if the retailers would study ways of presenting their wares attractively, as there are lots of people who will buy if the desire for possession is raised by an attractive arrangement. He told of an instance he had noted where a bowl of wall flowers had attracted no notice from customers until the retailer had made a pretty arrangement of them in a hamper. It quickly sold at a good price and others followed as fast as they could be made up.

He continually emphasized the necessity of tempting the buyers by artistic arrangement rather than depending upon sales by the dozen merely. He held that a pretty bunch of two dozen carnations could be sold in most cases to the lady who had called with the intention of buying but one dozen. He held that there had been more progress in the attractive presentation of groceries to the prospective buyers than in flowers. He also spoke of the importance of prettily arranging flowers in the box for delivery.

The various points mentioned were endorsed by several of the retailers present. Mr. E. Wienhoeber said that the neater and prettier the bunch presented to the customer the easier it was to sell it, and often a much larger quantity was sold simply because the customer wanted the arrangement as it was, even if it did contain more flowers than she had intended to buy.

Mr. E. Enders, with C. A. Samuelson, further emphasized the matter. They make it a point to change their window display frequently, and are constantly studying on new features. Often a glimpse of something in the window, or the general effect, brings a passing carriage and its occupant back to the store and generous sales result that would have been lost but for the window display. And regular customers come frequently to admire the new features. As a result sales follow when customers had intended to merely admire. Some had come to look for these changes and occasionally they had an inquiry as to what the main feature would be next week, showing a lively interest had been developed.

The growers and wholesalers were touched up a little in regard to laxity in properly grading their stock. There were some interesting good natured passages at arms and the meeting was a lively and interesting one.

THE CYCLAMEN.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph taken Jan. 25 of a house of cyclamen plants being grown for seed at the establishment of Messrs. Lehnig & Winnefeld, Hackensack, N. J. The house is 12x100 and contains about 500 plants, which have been selected for seed growing from a lot of about 14,000.

They say that with the cyclamen more than anything else it is necessary to have good strong seed to produce good flowering plants. The seed plants must be vigorous and healthy and of medium size, namely twelve to fifteen inches in diameter, and the foliage distinctly marked. The flowers must have a strong, stiff stem, not too long, but sufficiently so to carry the blooms well above the foliage. The flowers must be perfect in form, of good size, and last, but not least, of a clear and desirable color. They take no striped or double ones for seed purposes.

The plants seen in the picture are supported by model carnation supports, the idea being to hold the seed pods up in an airy position and protect them from water and damage from lying on the soil. They allow fifteen to twenty seed pods to form on each plant, and whenever more flowers appear on the plant they pick them off to avoid any overdraft on the strength of the plant.

From now until the seed ripens the plants will require even more water than before, and it is well to give liquid manure once a week. The seed will ripen by May and June and will be ready to pick as soon as the seed pods show signs of bursting. Each pod contains fifty to one hundred seeds, which at first are white, but soon turn to the familiar brown color.

In regard to culture Messrs. Lehnig & Winnefeld say: "Seed can be sown from August till September in boxes or pans having good drainage. Keep well moistened. In about six weeks the young plants will make their appearance, and when the second leaf appears they should be transplanted. We have heard it stated that good cyclamen can be grown only in leaf mold. It is, of course, a good thing if to be had, but we have seen exhibition plants grown without any leaf mold whatever.

"If you have good airy houses with modern ventilating apparatus, grow them therein. If not, then use frames with top and bottom ventilating. Do not house the plants in the fall until there is real danger of frost. Give a light and airy house and keep the temperature a trifle lower than for carnations.

"The demand for cyclamens at Christmas time is very rapidly increasing. Though we have increased our number of plants every year, we have never been able to fill all orders. Many more plants could have been sold in New York last Christmas had they been obtainable."

House of Cyclamen being grown for seed at the establishment of Lehnig & Winnefeld, Hackensack, N. J. Photographed Jan. 25.

The second engraving is from a photograph of a plant of cyclamen grandiflora fimbriatum. This is not the so-called Papilio or Butterfly cyclamen, but a new strain that they believe will be in great favor in the near future. It is certainly very attractive.

CARNATION NOTES.

In the Review of Feb. 1, Mr. Marquisee takes exception to what I have repeatedly said about the carnation Marquis being a late bloomer under ordinary culture. Now, I do not object to being corrected whenever I am in error and we are all liable to make mistakes. What I have written in these notes from time to time about different varieties has been usually the result of personal experience, although in many cases I have been able to learn the experience of several other growers and in such cases I always consider their experience as well as my own in sizing up a variety, and especially the new ones.

Mr. M. is quite right when he says that just because a grower fails with a variety the first year it is not positive proof of its worthlessness; but, I think, that when a variety comes in late with you and you hear of many others who have the same experience, and you can hear of no one who has it in bloom early, you can hardly be blamed for branding it a late variety. I have seen several batches, and heard of many more, that acted the same way as ours, and so it can hardly be my fault altogether. But, of course, sometimes we misjudge a variety, which is proven by the fact that Mr. M. had Marquis in full bloom in September and had it continuously in bloom ever since. But does not this prove also that Marquis does need special culture to bring it into bloom early? Is it not possible that Mr. M. treats it differently than most varieties are treated and that he has lost sight of the fact that he has changed the treatment to suit the needs of the variety? I think that this seems more reasonable than to think that all the most successful carnation growers in the country should fail with the variety, when they grow other varieties to perfection.

The fact is, that these growers, not knowing that it has this fault, handled it just like they do other early varieties, which, of course, they would not have done had they known of this peculiarity. At least some of us would have been able to overcome this fault had we been warned in time. Now we know it, and many of us will grow it next year and, I hope, profitably, as it makes grand blooms, which will find a place among the topnotchers anywhere. But we have lost a season's profit, and the variety has suffered in popularity which could have been avoided by a mere bit of frankness on the part of the disseminator.

Is not this good proof of the value of the suggestion I made some time ago in regard to the disseminators giving us more information regarding the peculiarities of the varieties they are introducing? Mr. Fisher has told us how to get longer stems on Mrs. Lawson and Mr. Marquisee has promised to tell us how to get the Marquis into bloom early, but many of us do not need to be told now in either case. We have discovered the faults and we know how to prevent them in the future, but had we been told last spring or summer, it would have saved us a good many dollars this winter. I have spoken to many growers in regard to this matter, and all seem to think it would be of great benefit to all concerned. All except one, who feared that if the introducer recommended certain treatment and some one who followed it failed to be successful with the variety he would blame the introducer all the more. That sounds all right, but it is not to go so far as all that. He can say the variety needs early planting, or it must not be pinched late, or it needs more or less heat than most varieties, and that it does best with him in about so many degrees of heat, or plant it in a heavier or a lighter soil than the average variety wants, and so on, whatever its peculiarities may be.

I am well aware that the same variety often does well with different growers with very different treatment, and it would not always be necessary to follow the methods employed by the originator to attain success; but the originator usually has from three to five years' experience with a variety before it is sent out and he usually knows its faults as well as its merits, and he can tell you what to guard against if he wants to. A variety should not be condemned right away on account of these little peculiarities unless they are serious faults which render the variety inferior to other varieties of the same color. There is not a variety in cultivation today that has not some peculiarities of its own which perhaps no other variety has, and it will most likely always be so. All hybridists are well aware of this.

I have heard occasional complaints about E. Crocker not keeping well after being cut, and we had the same trouble until we found out just at what stage to cut it. Now we allow them to open full before cutting, and it keeps fine for us. Just to try its keeping qualities, I cut three blooms of Crocker and three blooms of Mrs. F. Joost on Feb. 17, and put them into a vase together, and set them in a bedroom which ranged anywhere from 45 degrees to 60 degrees, according to the weather. On March 1 one Joost went to sleep, and the next day the other two closed up, while the three Crocker remained fresh until March 3, when two of them closed up, and the remaining bloom of Crocker looks as though it would last at least two more days. I have kept carnation blooms longer under more favorable circumstances, but we all know what a good keeper Mrs. Joost is, and as Crocker kept longer than it did in the same vase, it proves that it is a fine keeper when it is cut right. MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Easter Plants.

There will be no question of so much importance to the grower now as the condition of his stock for Easter, whether backward or too early or just right, as he thinks. If we knew exactly what weather to expect we could regulate things pretty closely but that, very properly, will always be unfathomable. It is, by the time these lines are in print, only four full weeks until our crops should be ready for the market.

Azaleas.

Azaleas that have been kept in a greenhouse all winter are rather too early. That is, several of the best sorts. You can usually find one end of a house where you can place the forward plants and shade them heavily, at the same time giving them air day and night if possible. With small quantities you can even stand them beneath the bench on full, bright days. We find the majority of people who will pay three or four dollars for an azalea don't want them too full out.

A few years ago we had a hundred fine plants in full bloom two weeks too early and put them in a cool, dry cellar or basement. It answered the purpose after a fashion but they lost color and did not look fresh and attractive. Retard them before they open their buds if possible. In a milder climate than ours a deep cold-frame with air and shade would be an ideal place for these early varieties, but in case of a zero night it would necessitate a good many blankets.

Lilies.

In Philadelphia I saw thousands of Japan longiflorums that were in plenty of time or what I considered about right. If they are now clearly showing their buds you have them safe. The Harrisii that I have seen and the few that we have are easily in time. There is no trouble about them, but the Japans want a good deal of forcing; 65 degrees at night is not overdoing it, and where the buds are only just showing they will need that temperature. Now my plan, where you have a big batch of Japans in many degrees of earliness, some with buds two inches long and some only just showing, would be to give them all as much heat as you have at your command and not move out one of them till the first bud was ready to open. Remember they will last two weeks after they are open and when taken from a very warm house and put in a cool one when the buds are about half grown they will often stand still. Rush them all along. The earliest Japans will easily keep till Easter if removed to cool, shady houses just as the buds are beginning to open. When the buds are above the foliage the green fly is easily kept down, so fumigate mildly twice a week.

Lilac.

Lilac will come along nicely in four weeks in about 60 degrees at night and will be more satisfactory if kept in a cool house for a few days if you should happen to have them too early. We have kept them in a moist cellar for ten days in perfect order.

The Crimson Rambler Rose.

This is now a standard Easter plant. When down east two weeks ago I had to take a good lecture from expert growers like Robert Craig and Mark Mills because I have had occasion to advocate the summer grown pot plants in preference to the field grown plants lifted in November and forced for the following Easter. I will confess gladly that as Mr. W. K. Harris and Mr. Craig force these field grown plants nothing better or finer can he desired, but we have not yet been able to manage it. The secret is, they should be on your own place and not a particle of drying out should occur. When shipped some distance with ordinary packing they do dry out and dry canes that won't break is the result. If fine canes can be produced in 8 and 9-inch pots the previous summer they have the advantage that every eye will break and will force with ease. As I may tire my readers on this subject I will say, get some young plants this spring and plant them in your own field. If they make four or five good canes you can lift them for forcing next November, but they make much better plants by cutting back next winter and letting them grow one more summer.

Now about our Easter plants: if you can see the truss on the end of the growths they will be all right. They come along very fast the last two weeks. The flowers have a better and deeper color when grown below 60 degrees than they have when forced much above it. We were never troubled with red spider on the Rambler because we always gave them a daily syringing till the flowers are open.

Azalea Mollis.

Azalea mollis forces easily in four weeks in about 55 degrees. They sell fairly well because there is nothing like them in color. In hot weather the flowers drop quickly, but at Easter time they last fairly well.

Deutzias.

Deutzia gracilis should be showing their little sprays now. It is much better to bring it along in a cool house. I believe in this plant for Easter, for it pays to cut if you don't sell it in pots.

Spiraeas.

It seems we can't do without Spiraea or Astilbe japonica. Some force this plant in an extraordinary short time. Ours are just now showing their spikes above the leaves and in 50 degrees at night will be on time. I have before now recommended that every plant be stood in a saucer and a little water be put in them. This will save you one watering a day and add much to the robustness and color of the foliage and size of flower, and when you sell a plant tell your customer to keep them in a saucer and saturated. If not they are the most unsatisfactory of plants. In a church decoration I have seen them wilted by noon, especially if the sermon was dry.

Genistas—Acacias.

Strange to say our cytisus (Genista racemosa) is not a day too early this year. Usually they are wanting to flower about this time. Not a very satisfactory plant outside of a greenhouse, but what have we else but the cytisus in its color? I know of no bright yellow, except perhaps the Acacia armata.

These are fine with us this year. Plants that were pruned short back after last Easter and in June plunged out of doors have made a number of growths of two feet long covered with their little globular flowers. They have a bad propensity of rotting quite a percentage of their flowers, but even when in the best of order they do not sell as readily as such an attractive plant should. Keep them quite cool; they are sure to be in time.

Bulbous Flowers.

Bulbs have now been forced so long and well that you would think everybody knew every point about them, but we occasionally get a chestnut fired at us. If the tulips and hyacinths have been frozen this long, steady cold spell they will want a week longer in the house than if they have not been frozen, for if in the latter state they have been continually growing and soon jump into flower when given heat and daylight. Considering that winter is likely to be with us at Easter and the week or two preceding I would say, to be safe, give the Dutch hyacinths and daffodils two weeks, the single tulips seventeen or eighteen days, and the double tulips twenty-one days.

Lily-of-the-valley is always a favorite at Easter. You ought to put an extra lot in the sand for that date, allowing about twenty-one days. This will give them plenty of time to be fully out and a day or two to be in the water before using.

ROSE NOTES.

Sub-Watering.

Considerable has been said about sub-watering carnations, but so far I have heard nothing about sub-watering for roses. I have had opportunity to devote some time and study to sub-watering for both carnations and roses and was very favorably impressed with the results. I am of the opinion that when sub-watering is more fully understood its value will be more appreciated and the existing prejudice against it will be removed.

It is of special value in growing American Beauties. It assures having the top of the soil and the foliage dry while there is still sufficient moisture at the roots. There is no baking and cracking of the soil as the result of heavy overhead watering, and the soil can always be kept loose on the surface. The tendency to black spot is greatly reduced, and the labor saved by this system of watering will pay for the extra cost of building the beds in less than a year.

The beds for sub-watering can be made in many different ways. The great point is to have them water-tight, whether raised benches or beds in the solid soil. I prefer the latter, as they are more substantial and also cheaper. The walks are lowered so as to raise the beds some what to make it more convenient for working among the plants. For the sides good planks are used and they are held in place by small iron pipes across the bed. First the soil in the bed is well firmed, then gone over with loam or clay, which is also brought up the side of the plank. Then the whole is cemented over.

The beds should be about ten inches deep and as level as possible. Owing to the grade of the house it is generally impossible to have a bed level the whole length of the house, so it may be necessary to divide it into sections of from 25 to 35 feet. The sections are separated by cemented walls, which need be only an inch or two higher than the tile and which do not interfere with planting. On the surface the bed will be as level as any other. In a bed from five to six feet wide one run of 3-inch tile was found sufficient. In the center of each section a tee is placed and a tile attached that will rise above the surface of the soil to admit the water. The bottom of the bed up to one inch above the run of tile is filled with rough cinders on which about five inches of soil is placed. The soil should be well firmed and the bed is ready for planting.

The first watering is done from the top in order to help settle the soil around the plants, but afterward all watering is done through the tile. It is an easy and at the same time a sure way to get an even degree of moisture all through the bed, especially if the sections are not too long. If the bed is level it will also dry out evenly and there will be no overdry or overwet places as so often happens with top watering.

The soil should always be fairly on the dry side before giving water. I find that 2 to 2½ inches of water in the bottom of the tile, given at one time, will bring the moisture near the surface of the soil though the top will still look perfectly dry. One watering is sufficient for a week and often for two weeks.

Those not acquainted with sub-watering naturally suppose that the soil is more apt to turn sour. My experience has been that when properly handled the soil is not nearly so apt to turn sour as on raised benches. The reason is that the sun and air can always easily penetrate the soil, which can not always be said of raised benches. For roses, hybrid teas in particular, sub-watering is of great value. Some growers have used it with great success and it is well worth a trial by any grower. M. Stauch.

BLIND WOOD.

What is the matter with our roses? They were planted the latter part of April last in good soil composed of rotted sod and cow manure with a little lime added. The growth is mainly healthy, but they produce blind wood to a great extent and not more than ten per cent of flower buds.

We can think of no cause for this unless it might be due to not starting the fires early enough in the fall, as the result of which they were badly mildewed. Please suggest the cause and remedy. J. W. M.

Blind wood is often the result of exhausted soil. Roses that were planted last April should by this time be supplied with plenty of nourishment, either in the form of a mulch or of liquid manure.

If there is no deficiency in this direction it is probable that the check they received last fall was the cause of the trouble, but if given good treatment since then they should have recovered from the set back by this time.

It is likely that J. W. M. has forced his roses too much at times or in general, and may have kept his houses too warm and close and in this way exhausted his plants. I would advise liberal feeding, plenty of air whenever possible and an even temperature not over 58 degrees at night.

New White Carnation Hoosier Maid.

AMERICAN BEAUTY TROUBLES.

My Beauties are planted in solid beds in five inches of soil, with broken bricks underneath for drainage. They gave me a splendid crop in December, since which time I have had very few flowers. They appear to be in good health and are sending up strong shoots from the ground, though they have been losing some of their lower foliage. Some of these shoots are now setting buds when two or three feet in height.

I notice a ring around the neck just below the bud. If allowed to remain the buds turn black and break off at this ring. There is a small cavity with a black lining, but I have been unable to discover any insect. Two of the beds have received several weak applications of manure water. The other bed has received none, but the trouble appears to be just as bad on this one bench as on the others.

They have been kept at a temperature of about 60 degrees at night, with a rising temperature of 15 to 20 degrees higher in the sunshine. Can you tell me the cause of this trouble?

I notice that Mr. Stauch recommends lifting the old plants and planting in fresh soil after they have been cut back and properly rested. Can I not carry over the old plants without lifting after they receive the proper rest, if I cut them back and remove some of the top soil, putting on fresh mulching the same as with Brides and Maids?

Are cuttings of this rose unfit for use when they drop their foliage in the cutting bed, provided they are well rooted?

Subscriber.

It is difficult to determine what may have been the cause of the trouble described. It is probably what is commonly known as "blight" or "blast," which is caused or accelerated by the presence of either parasitic fungi or insects, or by atmospheric influence. The disease is fostered by a warm, moist and confined atmosphere. I would suggest keeping the house cooler, giving plenty of air and syringing no more than is absolutely necessary.

The Beauties can be carried over in the way described, but I have found it best to transplant.

The cuttings that have lost their foliage but are well rooted are not unfit for use, but they are inferior to those that retained the foliage. A cutting that has a leaf on will start to grow sooner after potting as well as making a better plant, and the principal loss after potting is generally among those that have lost their foliage.

VIOLETS.

These notes are not written with the idea of imparting wisdom to the old violet grower, but with the hope that now and then we may give some ideas gained from several years' experience in violet growing that may help the novice to attain success.

As I mentioned a short time ago, the taking of stock for next season should now be well under way and the balance needed should be hurried up. If possible, propagate twice as many as you will need, so that you can fill your house with your choicest stock and still have enough left to grow outside to entirely refill the house if for any reason those planted inside do not grow as you wish and you have to throw out a part or all of them. As a usual thing, this surplus stock will find a ready sale to the less fortunate grower who finds himself short or has an extra house that he suddenly concludes to fill with violets, and as the prices generally run, such stock should pay for its care at least, and it is worth much as an insurance against having to purchase stock yourself.

Do not take cuttings from plants that at this time show small flowers and weak stems, with poor, light coloring, and that have made a rapid soft growth. It is time and labor thrown away, the results are so unsatisfactory.

All such runners as have struck roots into the soil before removing from the plants can at once be pricked out in flats of soil without any further trouble. Those that have struck without going into the soil (air struck) will have to go into the sand to root, and the aerial roots should all be trimmed off, as they are too hard to be of any use, even though to look at they seem to be all right.

If you find yourself short of room in your propagating bench, you can make a very good substitute of ordinary flats, boring four to eight holes in the bottom to insure good drainage. Cover the bottom over with moss, say half an inch deep, enough to keep the sand from running through; fill with sand and put your cuttings in these, keeping them in a cool place without too much draught, and you will find that they take the place of the propagating bench very nicely.

Do not make the mistake of leaving them in here too long, as they should be treated the same as if rooting in the usual bed, and be pricked out in the flats of soil as soon as struck.

It sometimes happens that you have to put the flats where they get a stronger sun in the middle of the day than is desirable at first, and you must take care to shade properly with papers, taking the precaution to see that they do not lay down flat on top of the plants, permitting no circulation of air underneath, for this is nearly as bad as nothing, perhaps quite. Some tall labels in the corners of the flats are good to keep the paper up.

We have been growing Farquhar (as well as Marie Louise) now for a good many years and in that time it seems as though it had changed in many respects. The first year or two we grew it we declared (as many others have) that there was not a particle of difference between it and Marie Louise. We even thought the latter the better, if there was any difference. But as we grew it more it seemed to grow out of its tendency to spotting so much easier than the Louise and the flowers are generally much larger and borne on much longer stems. We have this season come to the conclusion that its tendency to give "bullheads" is caused by too low a temperature, and also perhaps to too rich a soil. The latter opinion is held to more by my foreman than by myself. But on one thing we agree, and that is that Farquhar wants a temperature several degrees (just how many we have not settled to our satisfaction) higher than Marie Louise. As a result we intend the coming season to give the warmest border to Farquhar and the coolest to Louise.

We have not mulched for several years, thinking that on the whole it tended to help rotting in a damp spell more than it did any good otherwise, and yet a grower called recently who thinks it is the only way to do. He grows good violets and we consider ours fair, yet we are following different methods. But our soil is heavier than his and he may need the mulching to maintain a more even degree of moisture. R. E. S.

TODAY AND TWENTY YEARS AGO.

By Edgar Sanders.

[Read before the Chicago Florists' Club, March 1.]

In some respects to me it does not seem so long ago, but how few of the old guard are still in the harness, and what a change, my countrymen, has come over the scene.

Twenty years ago—let's see, who and what did we have in the florists' way in Chicago in the year 1880. In many respects the difference now and then is magical indeed, in the flowers used, the general make up of them, and things generally.

Twenty years ago we had no Florists' Club, no florists' directory, no bowling club, no quartette, no liveried driver and tiger, with a fashionable turnout, no fakirs, no hello, and no trade papers. It is just about that long ago that I as one of the first starters in this city, retired from the field as one of your competitors, to make room for others to follow.

How many florists had we then in the business, what did they grow, and how different from our own times? Let me see —our city then numbered 503,185 souls; it is now nearly four times that number. The city proper covered but thirty-seven square miles, now 186. There were then inside the city limits sixty-one florists' firms, fifteen of these doing business as retailers in the central part and one wholesaler. These fourteen, by the way, then did the cream of the trade of that day in flowers. This is all changed. What those in the center now sell, exclusive of the fakir, is but a drop in the bucket, so to speak, of all the flowers that are grown and sold in this city. Shipping either into the city, or out of it, was then but an infant as compared to now. It would be hard to say how extensive a field Chicago's supply comes from, and harder still to say where Chicago flowers are not shipped to.

Besides the sixty-one florists in the city limits twenty years ago, there were forty-three firms in nearby towns, a total of, say, 104 firms, as I make it. Last year my computation was 377 firms in the city, and 140 outside, a total of 517, all kinds. If that is correct, in 1880 for every 4,338 inhabitants there was one florist firm; in 1900, one for every 3,477; less difference after all than I had imagined.

Twenty years ago one commission house had just started, and peddled the few flowers sent in among the retailers for a customer. Now we have from fifteen to eighteen wholesale houses alone, to 500 and odd growers and retailers, but the buyers now do the hustling. Here is a remarkable change indeed. So much so, that 50,000 roses or carnations could easier be picked up today for a rush order than 500 could twenty years ago. No longer than twenty years ago an establishment with 5,000 feet of glass was respectable, a range of ten houses 200x00 worth going to see; double that, a big place indeed, with lots of the smaller ones, still heating with old fashioned flues, and houses glazed with 7x9 and 8x10 glass.

Now, any one with less than 50,000 feet of glass is not in it; a quarter to a half million feet is the idea. The big eight who wholesale their own cut easily go 2,500,000 feet of glass, lumped together, and mostly in roses and carnations at that. Why, the money paid for coal by one of these giants alone would be a handsome take of the biggest of those of twenty years ago.

Of the fifteen firms credited to the central part of the city twenty years ago, viz.: J. C. Vaughan, John E. Bohan, W. D. Chandler, James Farrell, August Gutzloe, Albert J. Hovey, Mrs. C. Kriek, C. J. Kruger, Charles Reissig, Edgar Sanders, Fred A. Schiller, W. T. Shepperd, and R. S. Watson & Co., not one is left in the original business in this year 1901. In the outskirts there are a very few originals; as a rule, they are all new, the big ones, the oldest but a decade old; several even less than ten years old.

What did they grow twenty years ago? For one thing, not now seen, white balsams ran a close race with carnations, the old double white primula an important feature; camellia flowers also still in the ring. Disbudded carnations not thought of for ten years after; every bud expected to perfect a flower, and good sales at that. Tuberoses grown extensively nearly all the winter, a highly profitable crop at 3 to 5 cents per flower. A grand thing for the grower and the retailer as then in demand, even if bulbs were expensive as compared to now.

New varieties of carnations had a longer run than now, but no talk of sleepiness. President De Graw, Lady Emma, La Purite, Astoria, etc., followed by Hinze's white and red, Hinsdale, King of the Crimson, and others, all originated as late as 1876 and 1877 and had barely got a foot-hold in the trade twenty years ago. All told, up to 1880 there were raised and named seven in whites, eight in reds, seven in pinks, six yellow, and four white variegated, two maroons and one red striped. The next decade, 1880 to 1890, there was brought onto the market upwards of 125 new sorts. Beginning, however, in 1884 the coming carnation tide may be said to have had its origin, with thirty-two new sorts; 1885 dropped to eight only; 1886 ran up to 37; the two following years 16 and 18 respectively, out of the total for the decade of 132 sorts. After 1890 new sorts fairly rolled in; 1892, the banner year, is credited with 57 sorts, and still it goes on; many are called, few are chosen; you pay your money and try your luck. Hinze's white stayed with us until a very few years ago, and good old Portia, a product of 1884, is still in the ring.

C. W. Ward, you know, recently estimated that the florists in this country grow, altogether, 5,000,000 carnation plants each year, producing 60,000,000 blooms a year, that sell for $2,000,000. It may be in this city we have two growers alone that housed 240,000 carnation plants between them. Think of it! Whatever the number may be and what they bring, the Chicago market gets away with its full share of roses and carnations, and for this time we will end and let it go at that.

PETER WEILAND.

We present herewith a portrait of Peter Weiland, who at the age of only 23 years will superintend the construction and later have full charge of a large modern range of glass at New Castle, Ind., for the growing of cut flowers for the Chicago market.

The new plant will be owned jointly by Mr. Peter Reinberg, the well-known Chicago florist, and the young man whose portrait appears with this. It will consist at the start of ten connected houses, each 27½x300 feet, with the Garland iron gutter and iron post construction. Of these four houses will be devoted to roses, five to carnations and one to asparagus. The material has been purchased and construction will begin as soon as frost is out of the ground.

Peter Weiland is the son of M. Weiland, Evanston, Ill., and for the last four years has had charge of his father's extensive range of glass. He has been remarkably successful, especially with carnations and bulbous flowers, and though so young has already established an enviable reputation as a grower. Of course he will have the benefit of the advice and experience of Mr. Peter Reinberg in a general way, but in matters of detail he will act entirely upon his own judgment. It is certainly a great responsibility to assume at so early an age, but all who know the young man and the intelligent interest he takes in his profession agree that he is fully equal to it.

LETTUCE FORCING.

[Read before the Tarrytown, N. Y. Horticultural Society, by Wm. Scott.]

Though under ordinary conditions good lettuce can be grown out of doors in summer with very little trouble, when it comes to forcing them during winter it is by no means an easy matter, but one that requires constant vigilance, and even with all the care one can give, does not always prove satisfactory. The trouble can be summed up by saying that lettuce is a plant that does not adapt itself readily to forcing. In the earlier stages of growth little trouble is experienced, provided good, fresh seed has been procured, so that the plants from the start are free and vigorous.

It is when the heading stage is reached that the chief trouble known as leaf-burn or heart-rot, is experienced. This disease is the work of a fungus that attacks the edges of the inner leaves, quickly rotting the affected parts and sadly disfiguring the plants, often to such an extent as to render them useless. Extensive experiments have been carried on for years with a view to finding a preventive or remedy, and although a good deal of light has been thrown on the subject from a scientific point of view, so far as I can learn the preventive or remedy is still to be found. The only practical advice these experimenters have had to offer is to keep the plants in as healthy a condition as possible. That, of course, any gardener worthy of the name, tries to do, no matter what plant he has under cultivation.

There are three lines that suggest themselves to me along which the cultivator must advance to attain success. The first is to procure a suitable condition of soil; the second, to procure suitable atmospheric conditions, and the third, to procure, as far as possible, a fungus resisting variety.

First, then, let us take the soil, on which must largely depend the healthy condition of our plants. I need not go into the detail of making up a compost heap, as no doubt all the members here know how that is done. The sod should be cut, and the compost made up the same as for ordinary potting purposes, only for lettuce it should not be too rich, and I prefer to omit bone and any chemical fertilizers, and use only that from the barn yard.

I have to grow my lettuce in benches, but if I had my choice would certainly prefer solid beds, and if possible have them right down on the ground level, as here they have a much more natural condition of soil and a much more equable condition of moisture can be obtained at the roots. But where only benches are available for their growth, we must make the best of it.

I find it always better to keep them on the dry side, as I find this a preventive of another disease, known as stem-rot. This I have found to develop most readily after a watering before which the soil had been allowed to become too dry.

In filling the benches I use for drainage old, well rotted manure in a dry and rather spent condition. Over about an inch of this I put about four inches of the prepared compost, working the roughest parts of it toward the bottom. There is no need of packing it, as it can be firmed sufficiently around the plants at planting.

Now we come to the atmospherie conditions. Artificial heat is undoubtedly the cause of the greater part of the trouble in foreing lettuce. In frames where no artificial heat is used lettuce can be grown well with ordinary care, and are seldom troubled with fungous diseases, but without heat, which must during the winter months be supplied by artificial means, there is little or no growth, hence no forcing, so that we must adopt this necessary evil to attain the end in view. The question, therefore, arises, at what temperature is it most profitable to force lettuce? Or in other words, what amount of artificial heat can be applied to lettuce to be suitable to its most rapid growth and at the same time be unsuitable to the development of fungous diseases?

My experience leads me to conclude that a temperature of 40 degrees by night with a rise of 15 degrees on bright days is, all things considered, the most practicable. Fresh air should be admitted on all favorable occasions, and the atmosphere should never be allowed to become close and stagnant. The house should have sufficient piping in it to allow of the temperature being kept at the figure given without requiring the pipes to be heated sufficiently to give off a dry, burning heat, which would not only be detrimental to the growth of the plants but an incentive to the development of injurious insects. Besides, having the house thus heated obviates to a great extent the necessity of too frequent sprinkling.

Now as regards variety. I have tried quite a number and the one I find easiest to grow and least subject to disease is "Grand Rapids," but as this is one of the loose, flabby type, it does not find so much favor as the heading varieties, which the majority of families insist on having. Of this latter class I grow "Deacon" in preference to any other. This, though somewhat slower than some of the others in maturing, I have found to be the least subject of all the heading varieties to fungous diseases and makes a fine solid head.

In conclusion I would caution growers against allowing the young plants to become crowded and drawn. It is better to handle them in a small state, first from the seed boxes into flats, and again from the flats to their maturing quarters, before there is any danger of crowding.

SWEET POTATO PLANTS.

Could you give us through the columns of the Review a few points on starting sweet potato plants; when and how to start them, and do they need a hotbed or cold frame?

Plant a few tubers in box of sand or light soil in greenhouse or hotbed. They will soon sprout. When three or four inches long take cuttings and insert in sand. They will root as readily as German ivy. When rooted, pot, using 4-inch. Grow in hotbed. When well started put in cool frames ready to plant out middle of May.

It is much better to buy plants from a good seedsman along in May or early June. They can be bought for 50 or 60 cents per hundred. Make hills of light, rich, sandy soil three or four feet apart and about fifteen inches high. Have pail of thick cow manure water; dip roots in and plant on hills. Give good watering As plants begin to run go through them twice a week and lift up runners to prevent them rooting to the ground (as they root at every joint) or you will not get a crop. Wm. Rayner.

Club Meeting.

The last meeting of the Florists' Club was a very lively and interesting one. The talk by Mr. Buettner on the retail trade and Mr. Sander's paper on the trade of twenty years ago will be found elsewhere in this issue.

A communication was received stating that Mr. Benjamin Durfee, of the American Rose Company, Washington, D. C., would be present at the next meeting and would display a vase of blooms of his new rose, White Golden Gate, and would also probably favor the members with a talk on growing the Golden Gate rose, with which he is very successful.

Mr. H. E. Philpott, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, was a visitor, and told of the difficulties of the florist in a city where the thermometer stood at 30 degrees below zero when he left and where it had never been higher than 10 degrees below for the past three months. He said that growing roses was simply out of the question, as during the winter months the frost on the inside of the glass was rarely less than half an inch thick. He obtains most of his roses from Toronto and Brampton, as the duty of 20 per cent makes a heavy addition to the cost of flowers imported from the United States. He indorsed all that had been said by other speakers regarding the importance of attractive window displays, etc. In speaking of shipped flowers he said that the growers were too apt to let the flowers remain too long on the plants to make them good long distance shippers and that they should be cut earlier for this purpose.

Mr. James Hartshorne, of the Chicago Carnation Company, showed a vase of blooms of the new carnation, Mrs. J. J. Mitchell, a cross between Red Bradt and Jubilee. It has the size and form of Bradt, the color of Portia and is very fragrant. It is a beautiful carnation.

G. E. Anderson was elected to membership.

The Market.

The bitter cold weather has checked local demand and while there is no material change in prices of the first grades, there is a wider range and prices are really easier. On tea roses the range is now $4 to $8, with not very many sales at the top figure, $6 probably representing the rate at which the bulk of the good stock is sold and the poorest qualities finding difficulty in winning the lower figure mentioned. American Beauties still bring $5 a dozen for the best, but they grade down rather sharply and the poorest go as low as $6 a hundred. Liberty is getting to be more of a factor and sells at from $6 to $10.

In carnations the range is from $1.50 to $3 for good ordinaries, with a few fancies, such as Lawson, etc., going as high as $4 and an occasional sale of very poor stock at as low as $1. Violets still move poorly. For good stock the price ranges from 40 cents to $1 a hundred, only a very few bringing the top price and poor ones being often cleaned up at any bid made by the buyer, some sales hardly realizing enough to pay for the picking and bunching. Bulbous flowers are also suffering. The rates quoted on tulips are $2 to $5, but the sales at the latter figure are very few and the bulk go at the lower rate if at all. Daffodils move very slowly, too, and more are sold at $1 to $2 than at a higher figure.

Among the tulips coming in the highly colored La Reines from Klehm's nursery are very noticeable at Kennicott Bros. Co. We have seen these used in plateaus for table decorations, making a better effect than roses and they were some little cheaper, too.

The best hardy ferns are up to $2 a thousand. Good smilax seems scarce and sells at $2 a dozen.

Various Items.

Last Monday evening a large number of friends attended a surprise party at Mr. George Reinberg's, Summerdale, and were unexpectedly joined by Mr. John Beck, of Remsen, Iowa, a cousin. The affair was a decided success and the evening was a most enjoyable one. Among florists present in addition to the host of the evening were Henry Wietor, N. J. Wietor, Adam Zender, Peter Reinberg, and John Muno.

Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Bassett, returned last Monday evening from Florida and on Tuesday Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Washburn left for South Carolina.

As is noted elsewhere in this issue, Messrs. Peter Reinberg and Peter Weiland have concluded the purchase of land in New Castle, Ind., and material has already been shipped for the construction of the new range of glass to be erected there. Mr. Weiland is on the ground to superintend operations.

New Castle has also been definitely selected as the site for the new range of glass to be erected by Mr. L. Coatsworth, of Bentley & Co., mentioned last week. Eight acres of land have been purchased and building will begin at once.

New Castle is getting to be an important point floriculturally. A party of Chicago florists will journey there this week, taking the 8:40 p. m. Panhandle train this Thursday evening, to attend the meeting of the Indiana florists, and incidentally look over the existing and prospective establishments.

The bowlers will play a series of league games this Thursday evening at Anson's.

Mr. J. W. Canaga, of St. Louis, was a visitor this week.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

The last week of February read like a yellow-covered novel, a "dull thud" and "sickening silence" on every page, together with a "blood-curdling groan" in each chapter as some poor grower closed out his stock at a ruinous price.

The weather was too cold to allow the street-trade to do much business until the closing day, and the sun now runs high enough to bring out lots of material. Violets and yellow jonquils have been the most plentiful, quantities and quantities of the former being left on the plants for lack of trade. Single ones were even more plentiful than double. Roses of all kinds are not now so plentiful as they have been, but there are too many of them yet, and the size and quality never was equaled in the history of the business.

Carnations are getting quite familiar once more and prices are now easy, say from one to three cents, with a few fancy at four. Ordinary roses range from two to twenty cents, Meteors and a few Liberty from three to twelve and a half, Beauties from eight to seventy-five each. The scarcity in fine white flowers for toning up designs still continues, and the supply of good green material is limited.

Various Notes.

Much serious sickness prevails among the blossom men. Pres. W. C. Stickel, of the Park street market, strained his back, slightly, as at first supposed, but it is proving to be a tedious affair, being painful and interfering with movement of the legs.

Wm. Anderson has been laid up now for a couple of weeks with a scalded leg.

B. L. Clark, Jr., of Randolph's, has been quite sick with typhoid fever, as has also Mr. Hirsch, the Temple place retailer, and Silas Grabelle, of J. W. Howard's Charleston branch, is confined by a very painful combination of diseases. The grippe is still quite active, but not so vicious as formerly.

Out on the B. & A.

Having noticed two shining spots on the hills twenty miles away to the westward, I gathered up the remains of my personality and half a day's worth of spare moments I had been saving up during the past busy weeks and trained out there to see what they were. Simply the glass roofs that cover the almost phenomenal results obtained this season by rose grower Robert Montgomery and rose grower W. S. Wilson, under the lieutenancy of William Morrice. Imagine an immense triangle of about two miles' measurement on each of its three sides laid out on the beautifully diversified face of nature near Wellesley College, and you can picture these two places on the two northerly corners, with the gigantic establishment of the E. M. Woods Co. on the remaining corner to the southward. Mr. Wilson's place is in a secluded dell (not Dell Cartwright) of Wellesley, the other two being in Natick, and all of them are most easily reached from the railroad stations of their own respective towns.

The two of which I especially speak have attracted my attention from the fact that I have seen practically their whole output this winter and have been told that they are about the only ones that have not managed to get badly out of order at some time since last September. They are the only houses I have ever visited containing grafted stock from one to three years old, and perhaps it is unfair for me to be obliged to compare them with my old ideas of own-root or one-year grafts. Both of them are simply canebrakes of bushes shoulder and head high, with almost every bush and stem in perfect condition, even though enough material has been sent to Boston to furnish a New England farmer's wood pile. I almost dare to guess nothing better in their line never existed. Each is distinctly off crop now as much as they ever are, but a first-class old house of grafted stock does not produce its product so much in crops as roses formerly did. Both are up-to-date examples of modern commercial science in their appertainings. Mr. Montgomery's being absolutely new throughout, including dwelling house and stable. His place consequently shows latest results without the accumulations of years of experiment. A very interesting feature which also throws a side-light upon the owner's nature is a big bird cage, about 10x8x6 feet, containing about a dozen tropical birds of different kinds, and the happiest appearing lot of captives I ever saw. Too, the attention he gets from his "chief roof inspector," the cat, his two dogs and two horses, adds an idea each in its way. Another feature is that his whole establishment, of fifteen acres is so situated as to command a magnificent view of twenty miles in half a dozen different directions, and he has displayed much taste in home surroundings.

Mr. Wilson's place is one-third larger than the other now, and he is, at odd times, knitting away at a new house 320 feet long, half its length being now almost done.

The whole is distinctly a model, except one or two very small old houses, soon to be torn away and replaced.

J. S. Manter.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

This week has been a wet and sloppy one and it still rains. Walking skirts have taken possession of the feminine mind and the thought of flowers seems to have vanished for the time being. Business has been very dull this week; transient trade seems to be at a standstill. A few funeral orders are coming in, merely keeping us moving. Violets are very plentiful and are in greatest demand. Tulips and Dutch hyacinths are to be seen this week, but in quality they are not first-class, having very short stems.

Various Items.

Mr. Arnold Ringier, representing W. W. Barnard & Co., Chicago, is in town this week.

Mr. John Campiana, Alden, Alameda Co., Cal., has just completed one carnation house 30x86 and one fern house 20x50. Mr. Campiana is a son from sunny Italy and can perhaps claim the distinction of being the smallest florist in America; his height being only three feet. His wife is of average size; also his eldest son, but the two younger sons are dwarf like himself.

A. Galloway, Fruitvale, is cutting some splendid Marquis and Lawson carnations.

Mr. T. Stevenson, the London florist, is recovering from an attack of la grippe, having been confined to his bed for four days. When Mr. Stevenson was first taken sick he was swamped with advice on how to get well. Customer, No. 1 (stout old lady)—"I am sorry, but you take a wine-glassful of brandy and olive oil every two hours." Friend, No. 2—"My dear fellow, you look bad, but just go to bed and stay there until well and then get up." Deadhead, No. 3 (a drummer)—"My, old boy! you look feverish, drink all the whisky you can get hold of." Customer, No. 4—"I am sorry to hear that you are sick, but just have your wife rub you well with alcohol." Grower, No. 5 (no relation to Mrs. Nation)—"Get some brandy and take a glass every hour—don't remain on your feet." Customer, No. 6 (kind old lady from the land of heather)—"Ye dinna look weel Maister Stevenson, you just gang ta bed an' a'll telephone for the docter." Mr. Stevenson took a note of each cure as he got it, and, there being no two cures alike, it makes him shudder every time he looks at that note-book. The advice from No. 6 was the only advice taken.

Morse & Nelson, Piedmont, are cutting, from benches, some of the finest freesias coming into market.

Bennett Bros., Alden, are marketing a nice lot of perfect, ripe tomatoes of fine flavor, but the price offered for them at the best hotels is so small that they will not be grown another year.

Mr. Charles Kruse, owner of the Piedmont Nursery, Alameda Co., Cal., is reported to have died at Forty Miles Camp, Klondike, some time in August, 1900. His mother resides in Germany.

Peter Nicholson, San Lorenzo, is the grower of the finest Bridesmaids coming into market; Pelicano & Co. are getting them.

Peter Wadlinger, Golden Gate, has received from Switzerland a box of carnations, twelve in number, that are said to be very fine. Four out of the lot have died, but the remaining ones are doing nicely and will be watched with interest.

Mr. Robert Amstrong, Fernwood, has a very fine batch of primulas now in full bloom. They are a new strain recommended by Mr. Peter Barr during his visit to California. They are grand in color and giants in size, the best I have ever seen.

Mr. E. Carlson has returned from the Klondike not with nuggets but with whiskers, as he has not had a shave for one year. Mr. Carlson says wages are good in that region, but comforts are very scarce. At first when he got wet, and this he did many times, he used to hang his clothing up to dry, but found next morning they were as wet as the night before, so he took advice from the old miners and went to bed in his wet clothing, drying them in that way. That is the style up there.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade in general has been only moderately good during the past week. Stock of all kind is plentiful and prices low. Business in the downtown district is much better just now than in the West End, where little, if any transient trade is done. There were plenty of weddings and parties in the West End just before Lent, but now all trade from this source is cut off.

Prices on stock at this writing are as follows: Meteors, Brides, Maids, and Golden Gates run from $4 to $6; Perles and Woottons from $3 to $4 per 100; of these the stock is quite plentiful and of good quality. Beauties are still scarce and only the first quality are in demand at $3 and $4 per doz. Quite a number of short-stemmed ones are coming in, but they sell at about the same price as other roses.

Carnations, too, are plentiful and of good quality. Good long-stemmed stock is offered at $1, and fancy at from $1.50 to $3. While nearly all varieties sell well, white has the call.

Violets have taken a decided tumble. A few good lots still bring 35 cents per 100, but the bulk sell for 20 cents, or $1.50 per 1,000. The growers of Kirkwood are still picking some very fine blooms.

Bulb stock is a great glut and prices are down to almost nothing; tulips are fine; so are valley, hyacinths and daffs. Harrisii and callas are becoming more plentiful each day. Prices on this stock can hardly be quoted, as you can buy them at about your own price.

Various Items.

From present prospects quite a number of new greenhouses will be put up this coming summer. Several of our growers have already made preparations for extensive additions and alterations to their respective plants.

Mr. Nelson, one of the horticultural commission to the Pan-American Exposition, is in St. Louis completing arrangements for the Missouri horticultural exhibit. He was here a few days ago and examined over 150 barrels of Missouri Ben Davis apples, now in cold storage, and which he pronounced to be in most excellent condition. Mr. Nelson said: "We have in Buffalo 200 barrels and in St. Louis 152 barrels of Ben Davis apples. They are the pick of over 17,000 barrels which my sons and I grew near our home in Lebanon. The apples run about 250 to a barrel, while the average commercial apples run about 350 to 400. About April 15 the apples will be unpacked, unwrapped and sorted for specks. When repacked, they will be sent to Buffalo, where they will go into cold storage on the grounds.

"We feel confident that the exhibit will do much good for Missouri. The space is next to California and as select as we could ask for. The only fruits which Missouri need feel any fear of losing medals and diplomas on are pears and quinces. These New York will win, but on apples Missouri will carry off more medals and diplomas than any other two states that will make exhibitions. Owing to the fact that the legislature has provided no fund for the preparation of the exhibit I furnish the money."

Don't forget the club meeting next Thursday, March 14. There will be plenty of mixed flowers on hand and those who fail to come will miss an interesting afternoon.

Richard Frow is now cutting some of the very best carnations that come to this market.

Riessen Floral Company, on Broadway, reports an excellent business since Lent began, and have a few good orders ahead during Lent.

Bowling.

The February series of games ended last Monday night. Kuehn won both medals. The scores were as follows:

	N. G.	Total.	Av.	H. S.

The Florists' Bowling Club passed a very enjoyable evening Monday night and the ladies, too, seemed to enjoy the sport very much. The members rolled two games with the ladies as spectators, after which they joined in the sport, rolling a game of duck pins. Refreshments were served and everybody seemed to have had a jolly time.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. John Young, Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Weber, Mr. and Mrs. John Kunz, Mr. and Mrs. Guy of Belleville, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Berning, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ellis, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Beneke, Miss Dora Weber, Miss Gusoky, Charlie Kuehn, Arthur Ellison and Will Adels.

The scores of the two games rolled by the members were:

	1.	2.	Total.	Ave.
J. J. Beneke	195	194	389	194
Will Adels	162	149	311	155

BUFFALO.

Pan-American Exposition.

In a little less than eight weeks the gates of the Pan-American Exposition will be thrown open to the public. The question is asked repeatedly, "Will it be ready?" The writer has never seen other expositions till the season was well advanced and all was neatness and order, but from what visitors and those connected with other expositions say we are much in advance, and, with the exception of the finishing touch of grass immediately surrounding the large buildings, all will be complete. The buildings are practically all finished. Nearly all of them have their last coat of paint, and the shades and tints of color that adorn the Machinery Building, the Liberal Arts, Electricity, Horticulture and other noble buildings cannot be described, unless by an artist second only to the master who laid them on. The coloring of the buildings is one of the charms of the exposition, and when lighted by thousands of electric lights, as was the Agriculture Building a few nights ago, the effect is entrancing beyond my feeble powers of description.

The great bridge between the approach and the Grand Esplanade, beneath which is the marvelous Grotto covering about two acres and connecting the east and west Mirror Lakes, is near completion. From each corner there arises a tower 100 feet high elaborately adorned with statuary and from which at night a thousand electric lights will shine.

The statuary on the exterior of the buildings is another feature which was never before attempted on such an elaborate scale, and not only on the buildings but in the many courts and fountain basins the groups of statuary give the grounds a magnificent appearance. Some five hundred vases, most of them three feet in diameter, are being made on the grounds from the material known as "staff." These will be used near many of the buildings and the Court of Fountains. They will be filled by the Landscape Department, some with specimen palms and others with flowering plants and drooping vines. The two large aquatic basins, each 125 feet in diameter, one just south of the Machinery Building and the other in a corresponding position in front of the Liberal Arts Building, are not only grandly situated as an adornment to the general plan, but are in a warm and sheltered spot. The Victoria Regia and tender nymphaeas are being raised in one of the conservatories so that strong plants can be ready for the basins by the middle of May.

The Department of Works is at this moment receiving carloads of trees, which are being put in place and everything that can possibly be done now is being done. We have seen seasons (notably that of two years ago) when winter was gone by the 10th of March. If we should be so blessed this spring then the Pan-American will be most assuredly complete in every detail on the opening day. If spring is a month later, as it often is here, then you must give us ten days' extra time to cover every necessary spot with the pleasing grass which soothes the eye and covers such a multitude of sins.

The winter here has been the most favorable for trees and shrubs and hardy plants and bulbs that we can remember. Scarcely a night below zero, but moderately steady cold and with an overcoat of snow of about eighteen inches that has kept everything well protected. W. S.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The second annual exhibition of the American Rose Society will be held in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York City, March 19, 20 and 21. Full details, including copies of the premium list and a plan of the exhibition hall, may be had by addressing the secretary, Mr. Leonard Barron, 136 Liberty street, New York.

A report seems to prevail that the above society will hold a convention in connection with the Pan-American Exposition, and in consequence Mr. Leonard Barron, the secretary, has received an unnecessary lot of correspondence. The Pan-American management intend to hold an exhibition of tender roses in May and of hardy roses in June, but not in any way connected with the American Rose Society, and we have heard of no convention of the society being held here. We trust that your readers and those interested in the Rose Society will notice this and cease bothering Mr. Barron.

William Scott.

CORRECTION.

It seems we were in error in stating that the carnation basket illustrated in last issue was entered at the Baltimore show by Mr. Peter Fisher. Mr. Fisher's entry, with which he won the silver cup, was a vase of 100 Lawson carnation blooms arranged with asparagus. And there were three entries instead of one. In addition to Mr. Fisher's vase and the carnation basket illustrated, Mr. Robert Kift of Philadelphia entered his decorated mirror in this class.

THRIPS.

In reading Mr. E. Buettner's interesting talk on mignonette, published on page 382 of The Review of Feb. 21, I see he is anxious to learn of a remedy for thrips, and I have heard of many other growers who complained about the ravages of this pest.

I have found Gishurst compound an effective remedy and suggest that this be employed. It is an old English insecticide and it can be had from any of the large seedsmen or supply dealers.

A few years ago I had a bench of chrysanthemums that were brown with thrips in July. I used Gishurst compound as per directions on the package, syringing up one side and down the same, giving only one application, and the growth from that time on was clean and strong and all that could be desired. If it is so effective on chrysanthemums it will surely kill the thrips on mignonette, especially if applied before the latter is in bloom.

Thrips are also very annoying on roses, as most growers well know, and especially on carried-over stock. The insects work down into the buds and it is very difficult to eradicate them. Were Gishurst compound applied at the pruning season I think the plants would be very little troubled by the pest afterwards. Some growers claim that fumigating strongly with tobacco stems is very effective. I have not found it so, but Gishurst compound makes clean work.

DENVER, COLO.

Lent has made little difference in business, and the past week it has been quite good. With beautiful weather, flowers have come in pretty fast, particularly carnations and violets.

Plenty of bulbous stock is seen, and of good quality, which meets with fair demand. Good pans of tulips and daffs sell readily. The market is well stocked with good flowering plants and the demand for them is quite satisfactory. I noticed yesterday a fine lot of the true shamrock being grown by the Park Floral Company. They are in 3-inch pots and they are fine little plants, which should prove quite the thing on St. Patrick's day. They were grown by a German and though he hates the Irish, he was true to his dear little shamrock and has them to prefection. But Ben does other stuff equally as well and a look over the place shows some good gardening.

Mr. Valentine is very much better and able to take a short drive occasionally. We expect to see him about as usual in a few days. ROCKY.

THE CROCUS.

Little crocus, well, I swear!
Thought that you
Weren't nearly due
But you are a-smilin' there.

Little crocus, well, I swear!
Thought you'd froze,
Most all your toes,
Say, but you are lookin' fair.

Little crocus, well, I swear!
Who'd thought you,
All pert an' blue,
Would come out an' take th' air.

Little crocus, well, I swear!
Hain't you bold,
In all this cold,
Goodness my! what flowers dare!
ROBERT V. CARR.

Little fool crocus, keep under the heather;
You don't know the way of Cook county weather.

Or come out with a muffler, ear mits and a sweater,
And wait until 'fection time, yes, you had better.
CHICAGOAN.

WATER PRESSURE.

Replying to "Subscriber," the water pressure will depend entirely upon the height of the tank, which will of course govern the height of the connecting pipe. This last should be fully as large as the main that leads into the houses, but it is of no benefit to have it any larger.

Burpee's Seeds Grow

TARRYTOWN, N Y.

The Tarrytown Horticultural Society held its regular monthly meeting Feb. 28, with President Smith in the chair and thirty members present. Reports were made by the members who attended the annual supper of the Dutchess County Horticultural Society and the Westchester County Gardeners' Association; they all enjoyed a most pleasant time.

The committee reported progress on the schedules for next fall's exhibition, and hope to have them ready for our next meeting. President Smith was pleased to notice the exhibits on the table, and said he hoped it would be the same at every meeting. Mr. Turner, Rockwood Hall, had, as usual, a well-finished lot of carnation "Marquis," for which the society awarded a certificate of merit. Mr. J. Bradley, gardener to H. Ladenburg, Esq., Hastings, N. Y., honorable mention for violets Marie Louise and California. Mr. F. Gibson, gardener to Mrs. Hale, Tarrytown, the same award for sprays of Begonia Souv. de Francois Gaulain and violets. L. A. Martin, gardener to C. C. Worthington, Esq., Irvington, N. Y., certificate of merit for a bunch of mignonette in three varieties, and honorable mention for violets Lady Hume Campbell.

Our essayists came out strong, as we had two essays read—Mr. William Scott, gardener to J. Eastman, Esq., Tarrytown, N. Y., on "Lettuce," and L. A. Martin on "Mignonette." Mr. Scott's essay is sent herewith. In the discussion that followed Mr. Turner said that he agreed with Mr. Scott's methods, but has found that 45 degrees at night is better than 40 degrees, and that Thorburn's "Glass House" matures earlier with him than any other variety. It is hoped that such practical and interesting subjects will be discussed oftener.

Mr. J. Bradley will lead the discussoin on violets at the next meeting.

Two new members were elected: Mr. A. Grierson, gardener to Hicks Arnold, Esq., Rye, N. Y., and Mr. William Smith, gardener to Robert Mallory, Esq., Portchester, N. Y. There is quite a change going on about here, and we shall lose some of our members shortly; they will have the best wishes of the society.

L. A. Martin.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Plant Registration.

D. T. Connor, of Philadelphia, Pa., registers new rose "Four Hundred," a sport from American Beauty of the same general characteristics but deeper and more constant in color. Most of the growth is almost thornless; foliage a lighter green than that of American Beauty.

Wm. J. Stewart, Secretary.

Billerica, Mass.—The firm of Phillips & Dodge, consisting of W. C. Phillips and G. H. Dodge, has been dissolved and each will in future conduct his business separately under his own name. As each partner owned separate ranges of green houses on adjacent land the dissolution was readily effected.

Englewood, N. J.—W. Stuppe is no longer here and mail addressed to him is returned to writers with the indorsement "Unclaimed."

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Trade has been very brisk for the past month with plenty of funeral work. Bulbous stock coming on more plentiful.

Mr. S. F. Stephens' houses were a ray of beauty the past two weeks.

The houses of E. L. Charles, which show up well from the street, were very attractive last week.

Mr. Coursy has everything looking fine, with prospects good for Easter.

The la grippe has been playing havoc among the florists, the ones caught by it are: Mr. Ray, Mr. Gus Drobish, Mr. M. Evans, Mr. Davie, Mrs. E. L. Charles and daughters and Mrs. S. F. Stephens.

C. A. Roth, who conducts a cut flower store at the corner of High and Broad streets, was arrested last Saturday morning on a warrant sworn to by O. D. Tatje, charging assault on his son. The assault is alleged to have occurred Friday evening, when young Tatje stopped on the above corner to transfer from one car to another, when Roth came out and rudely ordered him off the corner, pointing to a sign "No loafing here," which is posted in his window. He even went so far as to push him into the gutter. Roth was brought before the justice and his bond was fixed at $50 for his appearance March 6. G. E. A.

CHESTNUT HILL, PA.

Tuesday evening, March 12th, will be carnation night at the Chestnut Hill Horticultural Society. At that time we expect a good exhibit and a paper will be read by Mr. Wm. Kleinheintz, gardener to P. A. B. Widener. Mr. Kleinheintz is the most successful carnation grower in this section, and the fact that he is to present this paper will undoubtedly secure a large attendance.

J. Howes Humphreys.

A GOOD DRUMMER.

Mr. C. Lawritzen, Rhinebeck, N. Y., writes under date of March 4: "Please drop my advertisement, as I have no more plants at present. The Review is a good drummer. It sells plants quicker than any other trade paper we have in the country. You will hear from me again soon."

Corry, Pa.— Last summer Mrs. S. L. Stebbins built a house for roses and carnations, size 20x100. She reports trade good. One florist, Miss Rhodes, has retired from business and the greenhouses have been torn down.

Washington, D. C.—Mr. O. A. C. Oehmler, formerly of New York, has opened a floral store at 821 Fourteenth St., N. W., this city.

March Prices.

Ethel Crocker has been with me all that I claimed for it, but not with some of the growers. If you can get the results I do it will be your best pink and in order to have it tried a second season I offer it free by mail for $2.50 a 100.

Elm City is a white that has given me excellent results, and as it is comparatively unknown I make the same offer with it—free by mail at $2.50 per 100.

RUSSELL. Again this has proved the most prolific and profitable carnation, giving us so far fully 75 per cent more blooms than Crocker and eight other varieties under same conditions. It never splits its calyx, which Crocker and some others do so badly. After five years' trial, under ordinary culture, it has proved the most profitable and best all-around carnation we ever grew. As large as Scott and of a bright shade of light rose-pink. Strong, well-rooted cuttings now ready at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1,000.

Ethel Crocker, $3.00 per 100. McGowan Sport, $1.50 per 100; $10.00 per 1,000.

R. H. MURPHEY & SON, Urbana, Ohio.

Our stock of Everblooming roses, all grown in 4-inch pots, is more extensive and finer than we have ever before offered our customers. All leading popular varieties for sale.

From open ground, we call your attention to our heavy blocks of Gen. Jacqueminot, 2 yrs., strong own roots; also such valuable climbers as Yellow Rambler, Steigera, Dawson, Climbing Hermosa, Greville, Wichuraiana, etc., etc.

The new climber, Wm. C. Egan, can be supplied in strong one or two-year-old plants at reasonable rates. It is the best of Mr. Dawson's fine hybrids, and is in fact a climbing Malmaison, of the same form and color, and undeniably hardy.

To clear leased land, we offer shrubbery in elegant assortment, at low rates by the thousand. Hoopes Bro. & Thomas, Maple Ave. Nurseries, West Chester, Pa.

SEEDS.

Burpee's Earliest of All is the Sweet Pea for florists. Notwithstanding their dwarf habit and neat slender foliage, the plants are of vigorous growth and come into bloom always ten days to two weeks in advance of the Extra Early Blanche Ferry, which has been heretofore a week ahead of all other varieties. The flowers are as large as those of the regular strains of Blanche Ferry, and have long stout stems, making them entirely satisfactory for cutting; they are borne in close clusters of three, all facing one way. The standards are a bright, rosy pink, while the wings are nearly pure white. Burpee's "Earliest of All" is not only the earliest to bloom in open ground, but is also the most desirable for forcing under glass for winter cut-flowers. The dwarf habit of this variety renders it much more easily grown on the benches, admits of closer planting, and from seed sown during the latter part of August blooms may be cut during the holidays, while with the taller varieties no blooms could be had before February or March. Per pkt. 5 cts.; oz. 6 cts.; ¼ lb. 20 cts.; per lb. 60cts.; 5 lbs. or more at 55 cts. per lb.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

The twelfth annual meeting of the Central New York Horticultural Society was held in the Chamber of Commerce rooms, Friday evening, February 22. The meeting was one of unusual interest. After an entertainment, which consisted of readings by Mrs. R. D. Jillson, elocutionist, and several very fine numbers on the graphophone, the business part of the meeting was taken up, at which time the officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: President, S. T. Betts; vice-presidents, Rev. Wm. A. Beauchamp, A. D. Perry, E. A. Powell, J. Wm. Smith, A. C. Chase; secretary, N. H. Chapman; treasurer, David Campbell. Executive committee, S. W. Rose, C. A. Fox, Geo. Ham, Peter Kay, F. H. Ebeling, and John T. Roberts.

President Betts, in his talk to the society during the evening, among other things, suggested the advisability of the society giving another series of lectures, one each to take place in March, April and May. It was also proposed to hold a rose show on the 6th and 7th of June next, at which time the amateur growers would be invited to participate in the competition for prizes to be offered by the society. A great deal of interest was manifested in the plans for this exhibition. The society also took action to send delegates to the second annual exhibition of the American Rose Society, which is to be held at the Waldorf-Astoria, in New York City, March 19, 20, and 21st. President Betts and Treasurer David Campbell were elected as delegates and A. C. Chase and J. Wm. Smith as alternates to represent the society at the rose show on that occasion.

The proposition was also presented at the meeting to hold a chrysanthemum show on the 12th, 13th and 14th of November next. The matter was not fully decided, but the plans may be perfected whereby the exhibition, under the auspices of the society, may occur on the above dates. The Central New York Horticultural Society has done a good work in this community for a number of years and has encouraged a large interest along the line of horticulture and floriculture.

MILWAUKEE.

Articles of incorporation of the C. C. Pollworth Co., were filed March 5 with C. C. Pollworth, Jos. E. Pollworth and W. A. Kennedy as incorporators. The capital stock is placed at $25,000 and the business is to grow and sell palms, plants, cut flowers and general supplies for the trade. Mr. Kennedy will assume the management of the palm and greenhouse department as formerly conducted by C. C. Pollworth.

You would find a copy of the Florists' Manual, by Wm. Scott, especially valuable during the next few months. It tells you all about handling bedding plants to the best advantage at the least expense. The book will save you many times its cost during that period.

ROSES

GRAFTED ROSES.

It seems to have become a settled fact in the minds of most rose growers that grafted plants are superior to own root stock, no matter whether grown on raised benches or solid beds. There is, however, a difference of opinion as to whether it is the most profitable to grow them on raised benches or solid beds. We grow them under both conditions and so far the benched plants far exceed those in solid beds in quantity but not in quality. This is our first year's experience, though, and we expect the solid beds will make up lost time when the hot weather comes.

We would like to have the opinion of some of the REVIEW'S readers as to the comparative value of beds and benches for grafted stock and the best depth for same. If it is practicable to carry benched grafted stock over from year to year the same as when in solid beds the benches would in my opinion be most profitable, as grafting means a lot of work and expense.

No doubt those growers who have had grafted stock both on benches and in solid beds will favor us with the conclusions formed from their experience, and their method of treatment. We are now grafting and planning for another season, and no doubt others are doing the same, so a full discussion at this time would be helpful to many.

NORTHWEST.

Some growers put up a strong argument in favor of own root stock but apparently grafted stock is working its way to the front. Year by year more of it is planted and I notice that wherever it has been introduced it stays, whether on benches or in solid beds. With us our grafted stock is far ahead of that on own roots. Of late the own root plants have gained so as to come up close to the grafted ones owing to very strong and vigorous growth from the bottom, but up to this time the grafted plants were much superior.

We started to propagate about the middle of December and potted the Manetti stocks Christmas week. At present we have both grafted and own root plants in 3-inch pots and the grafted plants are three times the size of own root ones. In a month or two more the difference will be still greater.

The question, raised by "Northwest" is well worthy the fullest consideration by every grower, and it would certainly be of great value and benefit to all if those who have had experience in the matter would communicate it through the REVIEW.

My own opinion is that solid beds are the most profitable providing they are properly handled. Even if they produce a few less flowers the difference in the expense will more than offset it. However, I would not advise anyone to change from the bench system to solid beds without first giving it a trial for a year or two on a small scale. Though the culture is apparently much the same there are some little details which must be fully understood. If from some cause the roses in solid beds receive a severe check in the fall it is very difficult to get them into good condition again before spring, and the resulting loss would of course be considerable.

My experience with grafted stock has been that it is best for both benches and solid beds, the last in particular. I do not, however, wish to say that own root stock cannot be made to equal it. Grafted stock starts off quicker but with good care own root stock will have been just as profitable at the end of the year. The principal advantage of the grafted stock is the more robust constitution. Eel-worms in particular will not affect them as much as the own root plants and they are not so susceptible to disease or injury from mistreatment. Again they undoubtedly bring far the best flowers during the first part of the rose season.

As to carrying over grafted plants on raised benches the same as in solid beds I do not think it advisable. I have never tried this plan but I can not see how it would be possible to carry over this stock from year to year in only four to five inches of soil without exhausting its strength to such a degree as to render it worthless. Yet I believe that if the plants were lifted and replanted in fresh soil they could be used for a number of years. I have never carried either grafted or own root plants over for more than two years, not because they did not look strong and healthy or it was not considered advisable, but it has happened that we either planted them in solid beds or made use of them otherwise.

M. STAUCH.

I have never had any experience of account in my own practice with grafted stock in solid beds, hence am not qualified to reply to the question. I have watched with much interest the use of grafted roses and have not yet become a thorough convert, perhaps I may change my mind after more experience. As it was first recommended as a sovereign preventive of Eel-worm, and I had no use for grafted plants for that purpose, did not give the subject attention until within a year or so, since it has been claimed that by the use of these we may be able to grow much finer blooms. True it is that some growers, notably Mr. Montgomery, of Natick, have produced wonderful blooms on grafted Brides and Maids in solid beds. These I have seen and know. I also hear that Mr. Pierson, of Cromwell, Conn., uses grafted stock in solid beds, and while I have not seen the plants, can vouch for the quality of the product. Now, outside of these two places it does not appear that grafted stock has made such a vast improvement over own roots and it may be that the grower had something to do with it.

Where I have used grafted stock on benches, I fail to see the great advantage, and as I said am not competent to advise.

BENJ. DORRANCE.

Regarding grafted stock our experience with both solid beds and plants on benches has been about the same as with stock on own roots. Beds give best quality and benches the quantity.

With us the grafted stock has been no better than that on own roots except to make a little larger plant for the first three or four months. After this time there is no difference in plants or flowers.

GEO. M. KELLOGG.

I have never grown any roses in solid beds and my experience with grafted plants was that they were no better than those on own roots.

JOSEPH HEACOCK.

YELLOW ROSE FOLIAGE.

We would like to know what causes light green or yellowish foliage on our roses. They are healthy looking otherwise, having large, perfect buds, very strong, thick stems from one to two feet long. The foliage has turned in the last month. One house runs north and south and one east and west. E. C.

The question is a very broad one. Yellow foliage may result from very different causes. E. C. does not say what treatment his roses have received, but if they are otherwise vigorous and the foliage has turned yellow only during the last month it is apparent that they have been either overfed or overwatered. Long spells of cloudy weather are apt to turn the foliage light green, especially if ventilation is not properly attended to.

M. STAUCH.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The annual exhibition of the American Rose Society will be held in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, New York City, next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. The list of premiums is remarkably long and valuable, and there will no doubt be a lively competition. In addition to a host of exceedingly liberal cash prizes, so arranged that growers having moderate-sized establishments can compete one with another without being pitted against the big fellows, as well as classes for the latter, there is a great number of valuable cups. Cups valued at $100 are common, and one (that offered by the Lord & Burnham Co.) is valued at $250. It is certainly a remarkably generous prize list and should bring out a memorable display.

Full details, including copies of the premium list and a plan of the exhibition hall, may be had by addressing the secretary, Mr. Leonard Barron, 136 Liberty street, New York.

CARNATION NOTES.

Potting Young Plants.

By this time the young plants of many of the new varieties have reached you and, so far, all we have seen are in good healthy condition and with proper care will show what is in them the coming season. This is as it should be, for when you pay a good price for a plant or cutting you have a right to expect a good plant for your money. There will be enough varieties that will not do well with you and the sooner you find them out the better it will be, so you can discard them. One does not like to discard a variety without having given it a fair trial, but that is hardly possible unless you have good stock to begin with, and in good time, to make strong plants by the time you want to plant them in the house. Strong cuttings put in now will make good plants, but every day counts and you want to give them the best of care and a good cool place where they will grow sturdy. There will be no time to shift them before planting out time, so give them good sized pots, 2½-inch, and if they are extra strong 3-inch pots are not too large providing the drainage is good.

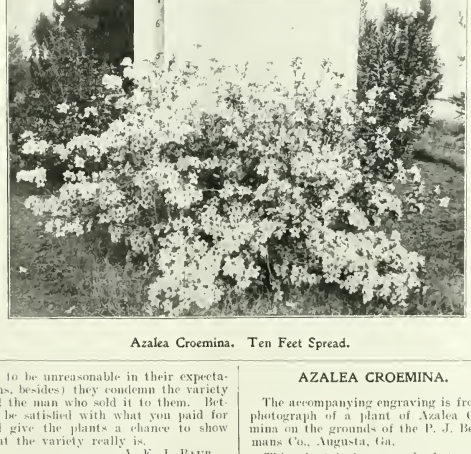
Do not allow your greed to get the better of your judgment and cause you to do like some growers do. Many growers will pot up the cuttings and put them into a warm house where they will make quick growth and as soon as they are large enough they take off most of the plant to make another cutting and they imagine they have twice as much stock as they really paid for. They have twice as many plants, but what kind of plants are they? They are soft and weak and good subjects for every kind of disease the carnation is heir to and none of the plants will be as large in the fall as those that were grown cool and topped properly. Then when the poor mistreated plants fail to produce as good blooms as these growers expect (and they are off in the fall it would then probably bloom more evenly.

Mr. Wietor, by the way, is on the lookout for a better midwinter white than White Cloud. He says Hill is all right for fall and spring, but in mid winter Cloud is the main dependence. It is, however, too late for fall blooming, and in spring Hill is superior. A good all around white is something he would like to get hold of.

A HOUSE OF WHITE CLOUD.

We present herewith an engraving from a photograph of a house of White Cloud carnations at the establishment of Wietor Bros., Chicago. The house is one of the new ones erected last summer and is 30x300. In this range the Garland iron gutter and iron post construction was employed. The gutter and posts may be seen at the left in the picture. The Wietor Bros. have the flow pipe above the benches in their heating system, and consider it quite an advantage. The pipe is suspended by wires from the purlin. All the purlin supports, as well as the iron posts under the gutter are set in cement.



Azalea Croemina. Ten Feet Spread.

apt to be unreasonable in their expectations, besides) they condemn the variety and the man who sold it to them. Better be satisfied with what you paid for and give the plants a chance to show what the variety really is.

A. F. J. Baur.

THE MARQUIS CARNATION.

Speaking of the Marquis, Mr. James Hart-horne, of the Chicago Carnation Company, says that with him it is the next best thing to Lawson and the greatest in its color. But with him it has been a late bloomer. He started to cut in quantity about Dec. 1. It has bloomed continuously ever since, though, and promises well for the rest of the season.

Mr. N. Wietor, of Wietor Bros., Chicago, says that they had a big crop for Thanksgiving and then no more until recently, when it came into crop again. They like it on account of its size and color, but don't like the habit of cropping that it has shown with them. He thinks that if the buds were kept picked when partially shaded from the afternoon sun.

AZALEA CROEMINA.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a plant of Azalea Croemina on the grounds of the P. J. Berckmans Co., Augusta, Ga.

This plant had a spread of ten feet and a height of five feet. As will be seen from the photograph, the plant was a mass of its light pink flowers. During the blizzard of February, 1898, this Azalea was frozen to the ground, but has since that time made a vigorous growth and promises to give a profusion of flowers the coming spring. This azalea has been standing in its present position for about twenty-five years, and until 1898 had never been injured by frost. It is, so far as we know, the hardiest of all the Indian azaleas.

It is growing in a very sunny position, but in a rich, loamy soil. The Messrs. Berckmans find in their section a rich soil in which there is an abundance of leaf mould to be the most satisfactory for azaleas, and they do best

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Executive Committee Meeting.

The regular winter session of the executive committee of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturalists was held at the Genesee Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., on March 5 and 6. The following members were present: President Patrick O'Mara, Ex-President E. M. Wood, Vice President W. F. Kasting, Secretary W. J. Stewart, Treasurer H. B. Beatty, and Messrs. C. W. Ward, J. F. Sullivan, A. B. Cartledge, J. D. Carmody, Alex. Wallace, Emil Buettner, R. Witterstaetter. The reports of secretary, treasurer, department of registration and the legislative and fertilizer committees were presented. The treasurer's report indicated receipts for 1900 of $3,000.45, the largest on record; disbursements $2,094.98; leaving a balance in the general fund of $905.02. Additions to the life membership fund during the year, with accrued interest, amounted to $369.45, making a total in this fund, January 1, of $954.45.

The legislative committee was instructed to watch any proposed legislation regarding fumigation of nursery stock and to advocate the passage of proposed laws establishing parcels post. The legislative committee, as appointed for this year, is composed of Messrs. J. N. May, Robert Craig and Benjamin Durfee.

A telegram from Ex-President William R. Smith, of Washington, announcing the passing and signing of the national charter was received with much joy and a congratulatory response was sent.

The relations of the so-called auxiliary societies to the incorporated mother society were then considered. It was the opinion that the best efficiency of the various organizations might be secured with the greatest economy of expense and effort by some manner of federation under the charter of the central body, and in furtherance of this idea a committee consisting of Messrs. Wood, Ward, Beatty, Stewart and Buettner, with President O'Mara, was appointed to consider and advise ways and means whereby closer relations may be established and maintained between the Society of American Florists and the various trade organizations now existent, particularly to establish uniform registration of plants.

It was also decided that in the call for the first meeting of incorporators, the Carnation, Chrysanthemum, Rose and Dahlia Societies be invited to send representatives to participate in the preliminary work of organizing the Society of American Florists under the new charter. Further consideration of the relations of the Society of American Florists with other horticultural bodies throughout the country resulted in the adoption of an order offering one silver and one bronze medal, each to be awarded through ten designated organizations that maintain at least one regular public exhibition annually, the medals to be awarded for new and meritorious plants or flowers of American origin.

Matters connected with the coming convention and routine business of the current year were then taken up. It was decided that the meetings and exhibition should be held at City Convention Hall, Buffalo, N. Y., opening on

A House of White Cloud Carnations at the Establishment of Wietor Bros., Chicago.

Tuesday, August 6, 1901, and continuing for five days. The following general arrangement of the program was adopted, subject to such changes as may appear necessary later on:

Tuesday forenoon—Usual opening exercises, reports of officers, etc. Afternoon—Judging trade exhibits and entertainment of visiting ladies. Evening—President's reception and stereopticon lecture.

Wednesday forenoon—Nomination of officers, selection of next meeting place and discussion on the adoption of constitution and by-laws under the charter. Afternoon—Shooting tournament and meeting of auxiliary societies. Evening—Stereopticon lecture.

Thursday forenoon—Election of officers and papers upon the following subjects: "Flowering Plants and Their Treatment for Christmas Sales;" "American Beauties for January Cut;" "Results of Second Year System With Tea Roses Under Glass." Evening—A paper on "Steam Heating for Greenhouses," covering the amount of each kind of coal required to evaporate a pound of water and of each kind of coal to produce a horse-power per hour, in establishment of varied specified extent. The paper to be by a scientific expert and followed by a discussion by experienced growers.

Friday—A visit to the Pan-American Exposition as guests of the Buffalo Florists' Club.

Saturday—Bowling tournament.

A reciprocal arrangement regarding the general management of the trade exhibition was made with the Buffalo Florists' Club, similar to that made last year with the New York Florists' Club. The rule admitting plants or flowers free to the trade exhibition, when entered for exhibition purposes only, was abrogated. Otherwise the rules as to space, judging, awards, etc., all remain as before.

The following appointments were made: Botanist, Dr. N. L. Britton; entomologist, Prof. L. O. Howard; vegetable pathologist, Prof. A. F. Woods; superintendent trade exhibition, Mr. Chas. H. Keitsch. Committee on sports, James Braik, William Scott and W. B. Scott. W. R. Smith was added to the committee on permanent home.

The committee on Final Resolutions, consisting of J. D. Carmody, Alex. Wallace and R. Witterstaetter, presented the following, which was adopted:

"The members of the executive committee of the Society of American Florists in meeting assembled, desire to express their thanks to the Buffalo Florists' Club for the magnificent hospitality and many courtesies shown during their stay in this city; also to such of the daily press as have kindly made mention of our sessions in their columns."

EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE.

From the Employee's Standpoint.

BY HERMAN KNOPF.

(Read before the Detroit Florists' Club.)

You employers know better how to use your men than I can tell you, but I will try to give my ideas as to how an employer should treat his men and how employees should treat their employer. What I am about to say will concern those employees who are in charge of places more than others.

The man who has charge is responsible for almost everything on the place and for the work that is done or that should be done. When an employer engages a man to take charge of his place he naturally makes a number of promises. He agrees to pay the man a certain amount per week or per month, and to do certain other things, according to circumstances. If the employee agrees to these propositions, goes to work and proves himself capable and trustworthy, the employer should make it a point to fulfill his own part of the agreement. Of course, there are exceptions to all rules, but the rule is that the premises are rarely lived up to.

When an employer agrees to pay his men once a week or once a month, as the case may be, he should see that they are paid at the time stipulated. The men naturally expect to be paid according to agreement. It is hardly fair to expect the other party to the agreement to keep its stipulations when you do not live up to your part. If this part of the agreement is kept it creates a better feeling all around. I have often heard men complain and say: "I will have to leave that man. Instead of paying according to our agreement, I get $3.00 this week, and $4.00 or $5.00 the next week, and as a result I am unable to meet my own bills and the money don't do me any good."

If that employee had proven himself to be a good man I think it would be money in the employer's pocket to pay him according to agreement, rather than let him go. In this trade good men are just as scarce as good places. Again, if an employee leaves his place because of the failure of the employer to pay according to agreement he will naturally communicate the fact to other employees he happens to know, and as good men do not have to take every place that happens to be open that employer will soon be unable to employ any but men who are undesirable in some way; and changing men often is certainly unwise.

Further, if an employer has a good man or men, he should use considerate and temperate language in talking to them, and the employee should see that he does likewise. I have had quite a few men under me and have always found that they will do more and do it better when considerate language is used, than when cursed at or a big fuss made. If an employer is of the swearing, fussing kind, his employees will generally work only while he is looking at them, and they will be thinking more of the clock than of their work.

An employee should always do for his employer as though he was doing for himself. He should devote his best energies to advancing his employer's interests. He will find that it pays him as well as his employer.

But when a man is engaged to take charge of a place he should be given charge and considered the responsible head, and there should not be several men with more or less authority giving contradictory directions. Employers should never take a man away from a job given him by the foreman and set him at something else. If he thinks the other work is more important he should speak to the foreman about it and let all orders to the men come from the foreman. Then there will be no confusion or working at cross-purposes. The men would have more respect for both employer and foreman, and there would be a better feeling all around.

And the man in charge should get a little credit for good work done under his supervision. When an employer goes through a house of stock in fine condition, it will be to his own advantage to make some remark expressing satisfaction with it. It will give encouragement to the man in charge and make him feel like putting forth further effort. I have heard employers say that if they should do this their foreman's head would get swelled and he would imagine himself to be indispensable, etc. There may be some fools of this description, but I am sure that as a rule a man that has brains enough and skill enough to be a good grower has got intelligence enough to accept a few words of commendation without getting a case of swelled head.

It will pay also to give the foreman a little credit when visitors call. It is too often the case that where things are in good shape the employer takes all the credit, and it is only when he comes to something that is not prospering that he remembers the foreman.

Employers would also find it to their interest to occasionally take their foremen with them when they visit other establishments. It would show good will and generosity and the observations of both talked over together would redound to the employer's benefit. I don't mean that such trips should be frequent. Two or three times a year would be sufficient. We can always learn by looking over the work of others, no matter how much experience we have had.

In this trade we have no standard of wages or of hours, such as they have in other trades. For greenhouse men I think that ten hours should constitute a day's work, especially in the summer time, when the work is hardest. A man who has worked faithfully under glass in the summer will feel almost exhausted when 6 o'clock comes and will sometimes feel too tired to eat his supper. In my opinion, if a man can't do enough for his employer in ten hours he wouldn't be able to satisfy him if he worked twenty hours.

I often hear employers complain of men leaving them without giving notice. It is certainly wrong for an employee to do this. When the man is engaged a certain length of time for notice in case of a desire to terminate the engagement should be agreed to, and this agreement should be kept by both employer and employee.

SEND your order and copy as early as possible for advs. in our special spring number, to be issued March 28.

TORONTO.

The Carnation Show.

The second annual carnation show held by the Gardeners' and Florists' Association and the Horticultural Society combined took place in the Horticultural Pavilion. Some dozen or so of exhibits not having arrived the show was not quite so extensive as was expected and there was plenty of room for more, but the hall was not a bit too large for the crowds that attended, and as what exhibits there were, were first class, new and interesting, there was no dissatisfaction expressed. There is nothing like a free show for bringing out the people, and, though there is no money in it for the societies, there is money in it for the exhibitors. Ergo, if societies provide $ for holding free shows, whereby exhibitors at said shows make $ by showing their wares, the said societies deserve the moral and financial support of the said exhibitors, to enable the said societies to provide $ for holding free shows whereby exhibitors at said shows make $ by showing their wares.

It is a great treat to the undersigned to visit Toronto during a flower show and to meet under one roof all his old friends in the trade and to find that their friendship is still as green as ever. Carnation shows seem to be especially fitted for renewing old friendships and making new ones, there is so much material at hand to talk of and compare notes about. However, your space is too valuable to be taken up with moralizing, pleasant occupation though it may be.

I will notice the various exhibits and my own impressions of them as I took them down in my note book at the time. The first was a rose, "White Golden Gate," exhibited by Messrs. Strauss & Co., Washington, D. C. It was a grand bunch of 50 magnificent roses with stout, straight stems, but to my mind the flowers are not so well formed as Bride.

Prosperity Carnation (666) was exhibited by Messrs. Dailledouze Bros., and I was very much disappointed; size is all it has to recommend it. "Hoosier Maid," shown by A. Rasmussen, New Albany, Ind., appeared to be a good, useful white as far as one could see; strong stem, good calyx and flower.

Cottage Gardens, Queens, N. Y., sent "Novelty," lemon yellow edged with pink; "Golden Beauty," darker yellow tipped with pink, and Gov. Roosevelt, dark crimson; all appeared to have good points of their own, especially the latter.

R. Witterstaetter, Cincinnati, O., sent good bunches of Estelle, Elinora and Opal, which had unfortunately been frozen on the journey. They are, however, well known. Estelle (a fine scarlet) I noticed favorably last year. I hear it is very slow of propagation.

Messrs. J. Gammage & Son, London, Ont., sent a very fine exhibit of standard sorts: Joost, Lippincott, Bradt, Olympia, Glacier, E. Crocker, Leslie Paul, Mary Wood, Lawson, America, Lord and Rosy Morn, a fine cerise pink, very fetching.

F. Dicks, a carnation specialist, also of London, Ont., had a very fine display. Van Horne, a bright pink which appears to be making its mark; Expectant, a strong growing white of good form of Canadian origin; Eldorado, always good with Mr. Dicks; Bradt, and a very fine bunch of Rosy Morn.

R. Jennings, of Brampton, sent up some fine Van Horne, Minto, Flora Hill, Crane (very good), Bradt, Jubilee (very good), Daybreak and Maceo; also some good Princess violets. W. Fendley, also of Brampton, also put up a very good exhibit of Princess, Farquhar and Imperial violets, and of carnations, Cerise Queen (a fine sort if grown inside), Scott, America and Maceo. Messrs. W. J. Palmer & Son, Buffalo, sent over truly magnificent bunches of White Cloud, Marquis and Lawson, certainly the best of their kind in the show.

Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass., sent a very fine bunch of Lawson which made a good impression on the trade; it seems to be the general opinion that Lawson is in it to stay. M. L. Tirrell, Randolph, Mass., sent his "Liberty," a good bright salmon color.

J. H. Dunlop, Toronto, put up eighteen fine varieties, all in good shape. Morning Glory, a beautiful variety taking the place of Daybreak, now nearly extinct; Gomez, Maceo, Olympia, Bradt, White Cloud, Ward's Red (very good and bright), Red Bradt, G. H. Crane, G. Lord, Melba, Mary Wood, Van Horne, E. Crocker, Red Jacket, Marquis and Lawson.

W. Lawrence, Mimico, made a very beautiful display of roses, carnations, mignonette, Lilium longiflorum, etc.; his large bunches of select Brides and Maids were grand. H. Spavins, Mt. Kisco, N. Y., sent "Mrs. James Wood," a pretty bright scarlet.

J. L. Dillon, Bloomsburg, Pa., sent his famous "Queen Louise," which looks as if it might be one of those whites we have all been looking for. The North Toronto Floral Co. put up two grand vases of Bride and Maid roses and had some very good Marquis carnations. F. C. Miller, Bracondale, Ont., showed some of his Van Horne and Lady Roberts in fine shape, and another pink named Lord Strathcona, which will be heard from later on.

Chris. Besold, Mineola, N. Y., sent (arrived late) his "Goethe," a light pink, and Admiral Cervera, variegated yellow. The Floral Exchange, Philadelphia, sent Queen of Edgely, which arrived during the banquet, about 10:30. From a distance I could see a grand vase of pale pink roses, a very taking color by artificial light.

The judges appointed to report on the various exhibits were Messrs. W. Mott, Philadelphia, and B. Myers, Buffalo. They were workers from the word go and conscientiously examined every exhibit, giving points according to standard scale. A handsome cup presented for competition by Miss Hallam was won by Messrs. W. J. Palmer & Son, Buffalo, for the best vase of carnations in the show with Marquis, which was really splendid. Some thought that the vase of White Cloud by the same exhibitor should have got the cup; it was hard to choose between them; both were perfect.

The banquet in the evening was well attended by the craft and a most enjoyable time was spent. The mayor of the city was present along with some of his aldermen. Speeches were short and pointed and songs were inspiring. The only thing wanted, perhaps, to round matters off was the presence of the Great Scott. O Willie, we missed you.

Mr. Thomas Manton read some startling notes on carnations, taken from "Flora Historica" (I think that is the name) of 1829, to the effect that our standard for size of bloom now is only half an inch larger than it was at that date, the standard for stem, calyx and petals even exceeding that of the present day.

Many outside florists were present (though I was sorry not to see any from Montreal). Amongst them were Messrs. J. Gammage and Dicks, of London; H. Brown, of Hamilton; J. Gilchrist, Guelph; E. Dale, G. Mullen, W. Fendley, R. Jennings, Brampton; W. Mott, Philadelphia; B. S. Myers, Buffalo, and others.

Mr. George Mills, as usual, was superintendent of the show, and it goes without saying that no stone was left unturned to make it the success it was.

MISSOURI BOTANICAL GARDEN.

The Succulent Houses.

From the director's administrative report for 1900, which has recently been issued, it appears that the plant houses at Shaw's garden have been increased by the addition of a Yucca tower, an Acacia house and a Cactus house, of steel-rafter construction, with sunken pipes, the plants being planted out naturally so as to give an idea of their appearance in nature.

The collection of succulents at Shaw's garden is probably the largest in the world, and is variously housed, but in the new ranges a few selected species are displayed in specimen plants so as to give a clear impression of the groups to casual observers. The accompanying illustrations are from photographs which have been kindly sent to us by Mr. A. G. Ulrich, of St. Louis, who, by the way, is not a cactus sharp but an amaryllis amateur, possessing a large private collection of this latter group.

SWEET PEAS.

(Read before the Germantown, Pa., Horticultural Society, March 11, 1901.)

The sweet pea, which grows wild in parts of Italy and in the islands of Sicily and Sardinia, was introduced into England two hundred years ago. Since that time wonderful progress has been made in its development, until today we have flowers with a variety and richness of coloring, combined with delicious fragrance that was not dreamed of in the past. With this improvement in the sweet pea, brought about by years of faithful work in its culture, has come an increase in popular favor which has brought the sweet pea to the front rank among our flowers, both in the garden and in the greenhouse.

The skillful work of the hybridizer has produced varieties that enable us to prolong the blooming season of the sweet pea so that it extends throughout the entire year, possibly excepting the months of August and September, in an unfavorable season. June and July are, however, the months when sweet peas in and about Germantown are in their glory; during these months each one of us who has a small plot of ground that is exposed to the sun may readily grow fine sweet peas.

It is important to commence quite early just as soon as the frost is out of the ground. This is generally about the middle or end of the present month, the object being to get the vines well rooted before the warm weather starts them into active growth. Select a sunny spot in the garden and as soon as the ground is dry enough, clean it thoroughly and cultivate, then dig a trench nearly a foot deep and a spade wide. Let this trench face the south if practicable. If it is desired to have two or more rows they may be dug parallel to the first row and with about four feet between. When the trenches are dug, put in three or four inches of good barnyard manure and cover this evenly with a like depth of soil. The trenches are now two-thirds full and ready for the seed, which should be sown somewhat more sparingly than ordinary peas.

Cover the seed very carefully until the trenches are half full or within an inch or two of the ground level, using great care to keep the soil both above and below the seed even and free from lumps; this is very important to success and should be done by a person accustomed to the use of the hoe. When the seed gets well up in the trenches another careful hoeing should be given, the remainder of the soil from each side being drawn lightly up to the rows. This is all the cultivation required except a hoeing to keep the weeds down; usually one is enough and pulling out any stray weeds that may appear in the rows.

When the vines are six inches high they will require support. The best way is to use wire netting with a one inch mesh, known as chicken wire; it comes about four feet wide and can be cut in any desired length. Stretch this wire tightly, close to the rows and fasten it to uprights driven into the ground. The effect is very neat. The wire is not expensive and when rolled up and put away in a dry place at the end of each season it will last for years. The vines will need a little training, especially when the support is first in place.

When the vines begin to bloom it is important to pick all the flowers as soon as they are fit, for if they are allowed to go to seed the blooming season is very much shortened. Flowers damaged by rain should not be allowed to remain on the vines.

Sweet pea seed should be purchased in separate colors and not in mixed lots. Much better results can be obtained in the garden by keeping the tall and dwarf, the early and late, varieties separate, and far more beautiful and varied effects can be produced with the cut flowers.

For pink and white, the best varieties are "Earliest of All," "Extra Early Blanche Ferry" and "Blanche Ferry." These are similar in color, but give a succession of blooms which is very acceptable. White, Emily Henderson early, and Blanche Burpee later; pale pink, Lovely; lavender, Countess of Radnor; red, Salopian; purple, Navy Blue, not fully described by title or name; orange-salmon, Lady Mary Currie. This is sufficient variety for a good assortment; the seedsmen's catalogues furnish almost endless variety should others be desired.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower business of this city has been very fair since the beginning of Lent. Prices have fallen and the volume of business has been smaller, yet the demand is steady and the supply of first grade not excessive. In view of the number of society people who have gone to Florida and the Atlantic seaboard and the falling off in shipping orders, the conditions are satisfactory, indicating that the love for flowers is not confined to the wealthy few, but is widespread.

The weather was exceedingly cold for several days, the thermometer reaching 8 degrees one morning. This drop in temperature probably prevented another kind of drop, steadying the somewhat shaky market. Roses held well. Beauties bringing $1.50, $2, $3, $4, and a few $6 a dozen. Teas, $6, $8 and $10 a hundred. Carnations, fancy, $3 to $6, ordinary $1. Violets go slowly, singles at 15 to 25 cents a hundred, doubles at 25 to 50 cents. Bulbous stock showed signs of weakening here and there. Tulips were fairly strong at $3 and $4 a hundred. Double daffodils sold nominally at the same price, but some very cheap lots were offered, generally inferior blooms. It is an open question whether many of us would not be better off with this inferior stock back in Holland or Italy. Valley brings $2 to $4 and is very fine. These quotations do not begin to cover the market, but they give a general idea of prices on the most frequently seen stock.

Various Notes.

Tulips and daffodils in pots and pans are selling quickly. It is sad to see the swell retailers digging bulbs up out of boxes and sending them out in pans. Surely these are not progressive, modern methods. Bulbs so handled can scarce help collapsing in a jiffy.

The club meeting was held on Tuesday. W. P. Craig read a paper on the Baltimore convention of the Carnation Society. There were a lot of interesting exhibits. The evening closed with a smoker which was much enjoyed by all who were present. Mr. Westcott!

The preparations for a plant Easter are tremendous. Besides the few large wholesale growers, who make a specialty of Easter, all the retail growers who market their product from their greenhouses will be in it, also some of the growers who usually depend on cut flowers. In short, every one will have a finger in the pie excepting just a few dyed-in-the-wool cut flower growers and a few others off in some lonely spot where the commission man's visit is a great annual event and Easter is almost unknown. The result will be watched with interest. It is too early yet to go much into details of the variety and quality of the stock. Phil.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

March 2 to 9 enclosed a mixed-up week. Both supply and demand were very irregular and naturally fluctuated so as to be mutually disadvantageous. Prices have galloped up and down the whole gamut from almost nothing to fairly good. The wholesale ice-chests have at all times managed to keep a supply of bulb stuff on hand, if nothing else, and part of the time have been running over with everything. But for a week of the early part of Lent I think the fraternity can congratulate itself. The use of red roses has been particularly gratifying on account of increase in the crop and the fact that they are not supposed to be used much in funeral work, which must be the backbone of present trade.

The Floral Exhibition.

It was all right and fully demonstrated its value as a means of introducing prospective buyers of new blood for their impoverished benches to all who make claims to being able to supply the article of proper lineage. The little annual affair is surely the place to start an interest in a new thing and to keep up an interest in a good old one. It seems, however, to be getting more and more a New England affair, since only one entry of a foreign nature was shown. This was by E. A. Nelson, of Indiana. J. L. Dillon, of Bloomsburg, Pa., forwarded some of his new white Queen Louise, but they unfortunately arrived in bad shape.

The following entries of new and standard kinds show how fully the ground was covered:

Dark red. Saxon, by S. J. Goddard; Harvard, No. 999 and a seedling, by J. W. Tailby & Son.

Red. Crane, by Ingram & Lynes; Cardinalis, by M. L. Tyrrell; a seedling, by J. Butterfield; 33x46, by A. Roper.

Pink. Mrs. Lawson, by Fisher, Patten, Nicholson; N. by A. Patten; Eleanor Ames, by D. Carmichael; Cressbrook, by C. Warburton; Liberty and Emeline, by M. L. Tyrrell; Copley, by C. S. Cooper.

Light pink. Marquis, by Ayer, Buxton, Twombly, Nicholson, Richwagen; Genevieve Lord, by Nicholson; Mrs. E. A. Nelson, by E. A. Nelson.

Very light pink. Daybreak, by Sim; No. 170, by Fisher; No. 35, by Roper; Beau Ideal, by N. D. Pierce.

White. Eastern Star, Gov. Wolcott and What Is It, by Fisher; Nos. 24 and 101, by Roper; Mary Whitney, by Carmichael; Lady Smith, by Edgar; Goodenough, by S. Littlefield; White Cloud, by Twombly, Buxton, Patten.

Yellow. Eldorado, by Nicholson.

Variegated. Bradt, by Cummings, Nicholson, Buxton, Patten; seedling, by Fisher; Crawford, by C. S. Cooper; Nos. 1, 9 and 99, by Roper.

Mignonette. Boston Giant, by Evans; Allen's Defiance, by Patten.

Palms and Ferns. Fine assortment by A. Leuthy.

Lilies. Elegant display by E. N. Pierce & Sons.

Violets. Single, by Conley, Sim, Cummings, J. H. Newman, Jelfrey & Co.; double, by Conley, Chapin & Co., J. S. Smiley, Horrigan, Small; white, by Smiley.

Antirrhinum. Red, by S. J. Goddard; white, by Geo. E. Buxton.

Begonias. Wellesley, by J. W. Tailby & Son.

The opinion of the committee, Messrs. Patten, C. Cartwright and L. H. Mann, on new seedling carnations is expressed as follows, backed up by beautifully designed certificates: No. 35, 89 points; Goodenough, 89 points; Beau Ideal, 86 points; No. 1, 87 points; Cressbrook, 94 points; N, 87 points; Mrs. E. A. Nelson, 94 points; Eastern Star, 96 points.

Messrs. Spillsbury, Roland and Zirngiebel awarded general cash prizes on single violets to Sim and on doubles to Chapin & Co.; on light pink carnations, first to Ayer and second to Patten for Marquis; on dark pink, first to Fisher and second to Patten for Lawson; on white, first to Patten for White Cloud and second to Fisher for Eastern Star; on yellow, to Nicholson (only exhibitor) for Eldorado; on variegated, first to Buxton and second to Patten for Bradt.

Cash awards were disarranged by exhibitor putting in more than the prescribed number to the vase and the committee adhering to the rules of the Carnation Society.

Daniel Hiffe made a very interesting exhibit of iron greenhouse fittings.

All this occurred on my "busy day" and I hold myself in readiness to be forgiven for any errors or omissions.

CINCINNATI.

Florist's Club's Monthly Exhibition.

The regular monthly exhibition of cut flowers, given by the Cincinnati Florists' Society, was held at the club rooms last Saturday afternoon and evening. It was a special carnation exhibition and was one of the grandest displays ever held in this city. Quite a number of the craft from neighboring towns were present, and after the show a few of our sports took the visitors out to see Cincinnati after dark. Your scribe met a number of these visitors Sunday morning, and then shook hands with himself for not going out with the crowd.

Albert Sandbrunch, Ed Gillett, Jas. Allan, Wm. Murphy and Frank Ball served as judges and awarded the following prizes:

W. K. Partridge for best vase of carnations, mixed commercial varieties, 100 blooms.

Best vase of carnations, 50 blooms, any variety, was awarded to H. Weber & Sons for Lawson.

The best vase of white, light pink, red and variegated went to W. K. Partridge for White Cloud, Morning Glory, Red Bradt and Mrs. Geo. M. Bradt, respectively.

R. Witterstaetter took first for dark pink with Lawson. Dick also won the ventilating apparatus offered by the Quaker City Machine Company, with Enquirer for the best seedling carnation.

Partridge and Witterstaetter both had fine displays of blooms, but the former took the $10 prize offered for the best separate display.

There were also quite a number of flowers entered for exhibition only.

The following seedlings were judged for certificates: Mrs. E. A. Nelson, introduced by E. A. Nelson, of Indianapolis, a grand pink, color and form of Scott, scored 91½ points. No. 723A, a good white, by Witterstaetter, scored 86 points; Norway, white, by H. Weber & Sons, scored 85 points. They also exhibited Egypt, a beautiful crimson, which scored 86½ points.

The American Rose Company sent on their new rose, the white Golden Gate, but it failed to receive the number of points required for a certificate, which was probably due to the distance it was shipped.

The following visitors were in town during the past week: H. Heller, New Castle, Ind.; J. A. Evans, Richmond, Ind.; Geo. M. Garland, Chicago; G. Teilmann, Marion, Ind.; Jacob Schulz, M. Kunsman, Louisville, Ky.; H. Rieman, Wm. Bertermann, Ed. Bertermann, A. Wiegand, E. A. Nelson, J. Grande, Robt. McKeand, M. Billingsley, J. Hartje, Indianapolis, Ind.; Geo. A. Heiml, Toledo, O.; Jno. Heiml, Terre Haute, Ind.; M. Rasmussen, New Albany, Ind.; Jos. Rolker, New York; S. S. Skidelsky, Philadelphia; Theo. Bock, Hamilton, O. B.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Trade Notes.

Business in this city is keeping up well considering that it is Lent and the florists are supposed to have little to do. There may not be so many swell affairs that take a lot of stock, but there seems to be enough doing to keep all the good stock used up right along. Good roses and carnations keep sold up clean, but of violets there are many more than can be disposed of and of bulb stuff there is also plenty.

A trip around to the growers showed them to be in good shape and most of them have some good stock coming on for Easter.

John Hartje has violets by the million and his Princess of Wales are simply loaded with grand blooms. John has enough carnation seedlings to plant an acre and if numbers count for anything he ought to be right in it.

Henry Rieman always has his place in trim condition and he is always busy; this time it was funeral work. His cinerarias and Primula obconicas are fine. These primulas sell better than the Chinese strain when grown well like these are.

Bertermann Bros. have a lot of fine stock coming on of all kinds needed for a store trade. They have lilies by the thousands in all stages. They have several hundred Mrs. Lawson which are doing fine and they are so well pleased with it that they intend to plant a bench of it next season.

E. A. Nelson is proud of his seedling carnation which he has named Mrs. E. A. Nelson and he says it scored pretty high at Cincinnati on March 9. No visitor goes away without having a good look into the house which he has planted to it. This variety will be in evidence at the annual meeting which is to be held in our city next year.

Baur & Smith have their carnations in fine shape. They are, by the way, the only growers around this city who are successful with E. Crocker and it is fine with them. There is no sleepiness or streaks about their blooms. Among their seedlings are some grand things that will no doubt be heard from at the proper time. Cyclamen in 7-inch pots 2 feet across and full of bloom are seen here and they have sold well. Their best Easter stock is a lot of Crimson Ramblers in pots which are coming along in fine shape.

On the 8th a party of florists went on a trip to New Castle, Richmond and Cincinnati where they attended the special carnation meeting on the 9th. They report a good time and no doubt the writer has missed a pleasant trip. Full particulars are not obtainable as yet, as the boys need a little more time to recover from the effects before they can talk and think clearly. A. B.

BUFFALO.

Last week should have been the best weather of the winter, but, alas, it was the worst. On Tuesday morning last arrived promptly on time that august body known as the executive committee of the S. A. F. and O. H., and I honestly think that for intelligence and business ability they will compare favorably with any previous committee of the good old society. President Patrick O'Mara, Vice President Wm. F. Kasting, Secretary Stewart, Treasurer Beatty and J. D. Carmody, B. Cartledge, R. Witterstaetter, J. F. Sullivan, E. M. Wood, Emil Buettner, C. W. Ward and Alex. Wallace. This accounts for all of them except Prof. Cowell, who is in Jamaica, and Lawrence Cotter, who we did not have the pleasure to see in Buffalo. Their deliberations and conclusions will all appear in good time. A very able presiding officer kept them at work and by Wednesday noon their labors were over.

Now, never did the poet say anything truer than that "The best laid schemes o' mice an' men gang aft a-gley." We had a half dozen sleighs engaged for a trip around the Pan-American grounds, but riding was out of the question. It was the cold, blustering, drifting day of the winter, and to hurry from one point of shelter to another was all the visitors could be induced to do. Had the Midway, with its most alluring features been running, it would not have sufficed to hold even the older members of the party and a return to the city, where a warm and comfortable bowling alley was ready to receive us, was highly welcome.

Three games were played, but as the sides represented no particular section of the country the scores are not important. Vice President Kasting was captain of one side and W. S. of the other, and in spite of the good playing of Mr. Kasting and the feeble effort of W. S. the latter's team won all three games. I tell you when you have such veterans as R. Witterstaetter and such a colossus as Emil Buettner and such weight and energy as Capt. J. Brink on your side you can't very well lose. Any team that has six Mr. O'Maras next August will stand a good chance of finishing on top. He is a straightforward, earnest roller and is there every time.

It is impossible to notice the many different styles, but those who have never seen J. D. Carmody and ex-President Wood roll know little about the intricacies and possibilities of this popular game. Carmody approaches the line with a low, stealthy, crouching gait, such a position and action as you would imagine was that of a man-eating tiger when about to feast on an unsuspecting Hindoo maiden. For his age he has remarkable speed, and is great on spares, a sure indication of a good eye, and every florist knows that meat saw eye.

Mr. Wood's position and delivery is entirely different. He approaches the balk line with a pleasant, ambling gait with the ball dangling at the end of his fingers as if he would be very glad to get rid of it, as you will occasionally see a man removing a dead cat from some locality where it was out of place. There is a great lack of speed compared with the expert players, but the triple screw on the ball makes up for all that. It first runs to within an inch of the left hand gutter, then curves over to within a hair-breadth of the right and then rolls up against the center pin. Here is where what is known as the back screw tells, for twice out of three times down tumbles every pin. It's remarkable and cannot be fully described.

John Evans is quite a bowler; pity there are not a few more like him in Richmond. Our Dan Long was great on double headers and if he had a little more control of the ball he would be a dangerous man.

The evening was spent at a vaudeville show, but not the one we intended. Buffalo has as fine a house in this line as any in the land and much finer than can be found in many big cities, but, alas, the White Rat trouble shut up that one and a poorer quality was indulged in. Several carnation enthusiasts visited Mr. Palmer's place on Thursday in company of Mr. Palmer and W. S., and I believe enjoyed it very much.

The committee was well pleased with the convention hall and all expressed the belief that the society has never had a better meeting place. Excuses or apologies are worse than idle, but I do feel that a greater welcome could have been given the visitors, but things were "agin us" and there is plenty of opportunity in store to redeem ourselves.

Business has been just fair for Lent, with plenty of flowers. We were very sorry we could not visit Toronto to participate in their carnation exhibition. Mr. W. J. Palmer is the proud possessor of a beautiful silver cup known as the John Hallam cup, which was awarded him at Toronto for a fine display of the leading varieties, including Lawson and the Marquis.

The principal visitor in town last week was Mr. Arthur Cowee, of Berlin, N. Y., the well known gladiolus specialist. Although it is only a side issue with him, he is marvelously successful, as the whole country knows, and he deserves to be, for he puts brains, energy and snap into his work. It is gratifying to know that in conjunction with Mr. Groff of Simcoe, Ontario, they will make the largest exhibit of gladiolus at the Pan-American that has ever been staged.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business is still in the same quiet condition that it was in last week. Prices on all grades of stock are on the downward grade. This is especially true of roses, violets and bulbous stock; the latter is a great glut at all the commission houses.

Carnations are holding up fairly well and most of the better stock is disposed of at $2, extra fancy ones bringing a little more. In 500 lots they can be bought for $1 per 100.

Roses are very abundant and the demand fairly good; $2 to $5 is about the top price for good stock; short-stemmed stock of the poorer grades is down to $1 per 100. The quality of this stock is better just now than it has been at any time this year. A few cold and cloudy days the past week put a check to the supply, but it is still more than sufficient to meet the demand.

The market is overstocked with violets and the commission men have great difficulty in selling them. Prices, of course, are way down, some selling as low as $1 per 1,000 in 5,000 lots. A great many of them were dumped the past week.

The same can be said of bulbous stock. Great piles of all kinds are stacked up at the commission houses. Romans, paper whites, daffs, Dutch hyacinths, tulips, valley, freesias, callas and Harrisii suffer alike. Prices can hardly be quoted at this writing. Sweet peas are a drug on the market and can hardly be given away. Smilax is selling well and seems plentiful.

A very active shipping trade was reported the past week, and this helped the wholesalers to dispose of some of their surplus stock.

Among the local growers Easter stock, such as azaleas, daffs in pots, tulips and hyacinths in pans, hydrangeas, spiraeas, pot lilacs and other stuff, is looking fine and all of them expect a great business in that line for Easter.

Various Items.

It was a great sight and a great crowd that gathered at the Union Station last Thursday to celebrate the return of ex-Governor Francis and his associates from Washington. Nearly everybody brought a bouquet to throw at the governor and his colleagues, and they deserved all they got, as they have done much to bring the World's Fair to St. Louis.

In the afternoon Governor Francis and the rest of the World's Fair workers were given a dinner at the Planters'. On the tables were four large bouquets of American Beauties, six dozen in each vase, tied with the national colors. The decorations were much admired and Mrs. M. M. Ayers deserves great credit for the skillful manner in which the work was done.

The Engelman Botanical Club met Thursday night, March 7, at the St. Louis Medical College. Prof. William Trelease spoke on "The Missouri Botanical Garden" and illustrated his talk by stereopticon views.

Henry Ostertag, of Ostertag Bros., leaves tonight for Chicago to decorate the store for the opening of the new branch of May, Stern & Co.

Theo. Miller makes a fine show of blooming plants at his place on Delmar boulevard.

The bowling meeting was poorly attended Monday night, only six members being present, and the rolling was not up to the standard. The scores were as follows:

	1	2	3	4	Tot.	Av.
C. A. Kuehn	167	202	153	160	683	171
J. J. Beneke	177	137	163	179	656	164
J. W. Kunz	154	145	146	...	445	148
John Young	158	125	128	....	411	137

The Burnham Boiler.

WASHINGTON.

The decorations at the recent inaugural ball were naturally an object of some little interest to the craft, and all who could get a glimpse of them did so. The writer was there and after consulting others in the trade who inspected them it was agreed that it was the finest electrical display ever seen anywhere. Without the millions of electric lights the decorations would have looked very ordinary. The material used for the main decorations was needle pines and southern smilax. On the first balcony at intervals of about fifteen feet were clusters of red azaleas. Victor wreaths were used all around the hall. A group of Bougainvillea Sanderiana in the center of the hall, with specimen areca palms was fine.

As to corsage flowers, every one seemed to have agreed to wear violets with few exceptions.

The stores report business very good during the inaugural ceremonies. Violets were scarce, as it was a Monday. Nearly all of the violets used here come from Virginia, and the Virginians will not pick flowers on Sunday.

Mr. Gude reports business as very satisfactory. Loose's sweet girl clerks were busy when we called, and Small's had about as much as they could handle. Charley Hale was hustling violets Monday, and he had some fine Beauties in his window. Blackistone is doing well and is getting in shape for Easter. Just across the street a very artistically arranged window strikes the eye; Mr. Oehmler reports business as even better than expected, considering the short time he has been there. Bolgiano and the rest up Fourteenth St. all seem to be moving. Mr. Robertson, on Connecticut Ave., reports good business last week, and Mr. Freeman, on Thirteenth St., has some exceptionally fine cyclamen and azaleas in his window.

Fourteenth St. has at present seven florists, and some of them keep open till midnight. It looks as though there might soon be some all night flower stores here.

Senator Foraker had a large dinner on the 3d and another on the 7th. The flowers used were double yellow and red Tournesol tulips, and the center piece was a scroll running from the center to each end of the table. It was arranged by Mr. Oehmler, and was much admired. He also arranged the decorations at another dinner on the 3d, at which many Meteors and Romans were used. The parlors were decorated with palms and azaleas. Baron.

ST. PAUL.

Various Items.

Lent has produced an appreciable dullness in trade, though Saturday night usually finds stocks pretty well cleaned out. Prices are somewhat lower than they were but are still high enough to be profitable to the growers.

As Easter approaches the shortage of good stock becomes more apparent and unless we have exceptional weather during the next three weeks there will not be enough for the demand. Lilies are late, while many of the longiflorum seem to lack vitality to bring blooms. Azaleas as a rule are looking nice and will be in good shape and full of blossoms for the spring holiday. Some very good cinerarias are seen, and a few nice hydrangeas. There is the usual abundance of cheap bulbous stock, such as tulips, hyacinths, etc.

In cut flowers there will be a good supply of all seasonable stock. A careful study of the local market from a retailer's point of view suggests the following hints to the growers in this vicinity: Plant more carnations, violets and Beauty roses, if you have the house to grow them in. Grow the fancy varieties of carnations and do not invest too heavily in high-priced novelties. The trade here demands good stock, but will not pay fancy prices for novelties. There has been an unusually good demand for Beauties this winter, but do not attempt to grow them in old or poor houses. Violets pay handsomely, provided you can get a full crop for Christmas and a good supply from then until Easter. Grow fewer bulbs, but put in Harrisii and longiflorum. In bedding plants grow geraniums and cannas, and in every line you undertake endeavor to grow only the best.

Travelers of late have been very numerous, and all report good sales. We remember the following. Others may have been here but are forgotten for the moment. Jos. Rolker and J. McHutchison, of New York; Martin Reukauf, of Philadelphia; Mr. Schucht, of Milwaukee; the representative of Waarnar & Co., of Holland; A. L. Vaughan, of Chicago and New York; E. M. Parmelee, of Pictou, Ont.; Mr. Spero, talking baskets, and Mr. Roberts, talking jardinieres.

THE BURNHAM BOILER.

The "Burnham" boiler, for steam and hot water heating, which is the subject of our illustrations, will need no introduction to the greenhouse trade, as this boiler has been well known during the past years under the name of Lord & Burnham Company's sectional heater. Owing to the increased demand for these boilers it was found necessary to increase the line and at the same time add improvements which, no doubt, will be appreciated by the trade in general.

One of the most important features in the new "Burnham" boiler is the method of connecting the sections. This is accomplished by means of a cast iron nipple, turned with a slight taper, the sections being bored out to correspond. As both section and nipple are bored to template it makes the sections interchangeable and facilitates the erection of the boiler, at the same time securing a perfect and lasting joint. The nipples and sections are made of the same material, thus avoiding cracking caused by unequal expansion and contraction.

It can readily be seen that this boiler has a large amount of direct fire surface, which chiefly consists of three tiers of triangular arms. The lowest tier of arms is the smallest, the second larger, the third being the largest. By this arrangement the rays of heat strike all the arms equally, thus making the direct surface of high efficiency. The upward incline of the arms towards the center and hottest parts of the boiler insure a rapid circulation to the outlet, which helps to secure very economical results. The products of combustion rise upward and after striking against and surrounding all of the arms pass over the fire wall section, then downwards and up between the baffle and rear sections. This form of indirect travel secures the maximum economy with the minimum of friction, as no matter how long the boiler may be the indirect travel is the same, thus adapting even the largest boilers for a low draught pressure, such as usually found in greenhouses. The direct draught which is a great advantage when starting or forcing the fire is provided for by an opening with damper in the baffle section.

As most of the surfaces are direct and practically self-cleaning there remains but little to clean, but large cleaning doors are provided in the front and sides of the boiler.

The grates are of the Lord & Burnham Company's patented anti-clinker shaking and dumping pattern, and so constructed that the air circulates freely around every part, thus affording the least possible chance for warping or burning out.

Lord & Burnham Company, owing to the large and increasing demand for their boilers, has found it necessary to erect a new boiler shop. This has been furnished with the most modern machinery for the manufacture of boilers. This company is, therefore, even better prepared than before to take care of all orders and to make prompt shipments.

Cleveland, O. — The Grant-Wilson Floral Co. has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The volume of trade remains about the same as last week with prices a trifle easier on roses and a little firmer on carnations, especially whites. Roses now range from $4.00 to $7.00, with some sales of extra selects at $8.00, and some under grade stock being cleaned up at $3.00. Beauties are $4.00 to $5.00 a dozen for the best and they grade from that down to 50 cents for the poorest. Good ordinary carnations range from $1.50 to $2.50, with fancy at $3 to $4, and some red Bradts bringing $5 at Bassett & Washburn's. On the other hand, Scotts and McGowans sell as low as $1 to $1.25.

Peter Reinberg is cutting some select Golden Gates that bring as high as $12.

Bassett & Washburn are cutting some really fine blooms of Liberty and the best sell at $25 a hundred.

Bulbous stock is still moving very slowly and we hear of sales of good tulips and daffodils at as low as $2 a hundred, which must be very discouraging to the growers.

Last Saturday violets were being sold by the fakirs on the street at 5 and 10 cents a bunch, which tells the violet story.

Various Items.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club tomorrow (Friday) evening, Mr. Benjamin Durfee, of the American Rose Company, Washington, D. C., will display blooms of his White Golden Gate roses and will probably favor the members with a talk on the growing of the Golden Gate. The program also includes papers on "The Easiest Way to Force Lily of the Valley," by August Jurgens and H. N. Bruns.

A meeting of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society of Chicago was held last Monday afternoon and the work of preparing for the annual exhibition next November was started. The preliminary premium list will be issued at an early date. The committee to prepare same consists of Messrs. E. Buettner, John Reardon and W. J. Smyth.

Mr. C. M. Dickinson, manager at E. H. Hunt's, left last Sunday for the east for a week's stay.

Mr. E. Buettner leaves next Sunday night for New York, where he will act as one of the judges at the exhibition of the American Rose Society.

George Asmus, E. F. Winterson, H. Coulson, P. Hurson and W. L. McLaughlin have been bowling as a team in the Union League of West Chicago and they stood at the head of the list at the end of the series. As a result, they will divide among themselves the juicy first prize of $75.

B. D. Kapteyn, representing Gt. van Waveren & Kruijff, Sassenheim, Holland, was a recent visitor.

George Scott is again on duty at Kennicott Bros. Co., after several weeks' illness with typhoid fever.

There is some little guessing being done on the question of lilies for Easter. It is said that the disease has been more virulent than ever and that as a result the supply of first-class flowers will be short. Others hold that there will be plenty of lilies when they are wanted.

Sinner & Co., Ridge avenue, near Adam Zender, who have grown vegetables under glass for some years, will this year turn their houses into plants for cut flowers and have purchased a big stock of carnation cuttings from Wietor Bros.

Mr. E. E. Pieser, of Kennicott Bros. Co., says it has been a most peculiar season, and the market has been a difficult one to keep the run of. While their business has been equal in volume to previous seasons it has changed some little in character, violets and bulbous stock cutting much less of a figure than formerly. Roses and carnations are more than ever the mainstays, and the "variety" that is reported to be "so much needed" has met with less call than in previous years.

NEW YORK.

Club Meeting.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club, held on Monday night last, was again most interesting, roses being the chief topic. It was expected that many new roses and a goodly display of others would be shown, but somehow or other, perhaps because every icebox was full, none appeared in the club rooms, except a vase of the grand new rose, "Robert Scott." These blooms represented the rose in every stage of development; some of them were five or six inches in diameter and of remarkable substance. By a special vote the rose was awarded the club's silver medal.

Mr. E. G. Hill, of Indiana, was to have been present to open a discussion on roses, but sent his opinions instead, which were read by Mr. O'Mara. This paper opened up a very interesting discussion. Mr. Robert Scott, of Philadelphia, who was present, said he had seen nothing in Europe last summer worth considering as an American forcing rose. He had had one or two supposedly good new varieties sent over to him, but they were only now showing bloom and their slowness made them useless. He was under the impression that Liberty would be better in three years; overpropagation exhausted the vitality of any plant although he had not seen Liberty anywhere so fine as they were at Mr. Asmus' place. He thought when the rose was better understood it would give more satisfaction. One thing, the rose, like others, could not stand a check, and he found it did better in light soil.

Mr. O'Mara reviewed the roses introduced the past twenty years, and said from a study of the matter he considered roses raised in the south of France did better in the United States than those from any other part of Europe. The climate there was similar to ours, and he thought this a powerful element; he was under the impression that America needed a race of roses of her own, and this was rapidly being accomplished by the few hybridizers we have here. He thought many of the old varieties, such as Cornelia Cook, Puritan, etc., would again come into popularity, and John Cook, of Baltimore, had some new varieties now that would, he thought, prove very valuable.

Mr. Scott said the white Mme. Cochet was one of the best outdoor roses. Mr. Stewart said Burbank proved to be hardy in his garden. Mr. Atkins said they were making several experiments in the matter of grafting stock; they got best results from wood of their own planting grafted on to dormant imported stocks; eyes taken from imported roses most often proved useless on account of their being started with them. Mme. Van Houtte, Mme. Cochet and Kaiserin proved great successes, but they grew a large collection of bedding roses which proved more than satisfactory.

There was quite a discussion on the proposed interstate laws regarding the fumigation of nursery stock. Mr. Kelsey asked for information on the plants commonly called "Florists' stock," and was sorry, as he understood it, that the florists did not help the nurserymen in having portions of their stock exempt from the law. Mr. O'Mara explained why and said the nurserymen had been given every opportunity to accomplish great good to themselves. The florists had succeeded in having everything grown under glass exempt from the stringent laws and the nurserymen had only themselves to blame for the condition of affairs.

A vote of thanks was sent to W. R. Smith, of Washington, for his valuable services towards procuring a charter for the A. F. O. H. Mr. Wallace reported that the national society had placed one silver and one bronze medal for competition at the club's show in October. The several committees reported progress. Mr. O'Mara said he had delivered the club's engrossed resolution to Mr. Starin and that gentleman was very grateful for the club's action.

HEATING.

Our present plant consists of five 20x100 feet houses, heated by two small steam boilers. We are going to put three new houses 27x100 feet for growing roses and the capacity of our present boilers is not sufficient to heat the entire plant when completed. Would it be economy to put in a separate boiler for the new houses? If so, would you advise steam or hot water? Or should we replace the two old boilers with one large enough to heat the whole plant, and would you advise steam or hot water? The old houses are piped with 1-in. pipes, which are, of course, too small for water, and we don't want to go to the expense of repiping this season. If you could give us a little light on this subject you would greatly oblige.

G. & D.

In reply to the inquiry of "G. & D.," one of either of the following methods should be adopted:

The first suggestion would be, assuming the boilers now in use are in good working order, to install a 30 H. P. wrought iron tubular boiler, and if possible connect it in battery form to the present boilers. The 30 H. P. boiler would have a liberal surplus of capacity over the immediate requirements, which would tend to relieve the older boilers, then when the old boilers give out a second 30 H. P. boiler could be installed, which in connection with the first would have a surplus of capacity sufficient to enable you to build three more 27x100 foot houses. If it is not your intention to increase your glass area, and the old boilers are pretty well worn out it would be better to remove them, and substitute one 50 H. P. wrought iron tubular boiler. I would not consider the replacing of the steam plant in the present houses by hot water, and the new houses should also be heated by steam in connection with the old ones.

If the heating of the old houses by steam is not perfectly satisfactory it is the result of an imperfectly installed system, and not the nature of the heating medium.

CARNATION IRENE.

Messrs. Crabb & Hunter, Grand Rapids, Mich., send us some blooms of their new pink carnation Irene. While it cannot be classed as a fancy, the flowers are of good size and form, a fine, clear pink, and are borne on first-class stems with good foliage. If it proves as free with others as it has with them it should certainly make good their claim that it is a most profitable commercial pink carnation. It is certainly worthy of a trial, especially by those who have not the facilities for growing extra fancy flowers, but want an abundance of good blooms in return for a minimum amount of care and attention.

BUTTE, MONT.

The Lenten season is having its effect here; trade is at a standstill, except funeral work, which comes as regular as ever. We expect quite an increase in the flower business this year over last, as the town is taking on quite a boom, many large blocks and buildings being now under construction.

We now have three retail florist stores in the city, against two last year.

Law Bros.' books show an increase of 25 per cent for the months of January and February over the same months last year.

Five years ago a traveling salesman for bulbs and florists' supplies was seldom seen in Butte, but now they all seem to make it a point to come here while on their Western tours.

We have been having a run of drummers this spring and the last to arrive was Arnold Ringier, general agent for W. W. Barnard & Co., and although he came late there had been orders reserved for him and he got his share. Mr. Ringier has been in Butte before, so did not care to see the town. He confined himself closely to the florists' shops until the curfew bell tolled, when he promptly retired.

Syracuse, N. Y.—John P. Bell, for the last eleven years with Henry Burt, died Feb. 27, aged 53 years. He was born in England and came to America thirty-one years ago. He was widely known and had a host of friends. He leaves a widow and one child.

WE HAVE advice from Mr. William Scott that he mailed a batch of miscellaneous seasonable hints for this issue, but the copy had not reached us up to time of going to press.

This paper is a member of the Chicago Trade Press Association.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The bill incorporating the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists has passed the senate and has been signed by the president, thus becoming law, so the S. A. F. finally has the national charter that has been so earnestly striven for.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.—The Florists' Club has decided to hold a carnation meeting May 9. Flowers are fairly plentiful, but none too many white. Except for funeral work trade is light. Violets are very abundant and are selling at unusually low figures.

OTTAWA, ONT.—On account of the death of Queen Victoria almost all the functions planned for the season were abandoned, and as a result trade has not been what it should be with the florist. It is hoped that conditions will improve after Easter.

FARMINGTON, CONN.—Charles S. Mason reports that so far as he has seen and heard stocks have done well this winter, particularly roses and violets. Of the latter there has been either an oversupply or a lighter demand, and his own experience points to the latter. Carnations have done fairly well. There was a shortage at the holidays, but otherwise no complaint.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.—At the annual meeting of the Kalamazoo Nursery and Floral Co., held Feb. 26, the election of officers resulted as follows: President, C. A. Maxson; vice-pres'dent, James M. Davis; secretary and treasurer, C. A. Krill; manager, W. C. Cook. The officers and E. J. Phelps constitute the board of trustees. The company has purchased property adjoining its location and now has thirty acres of land. An extension of the business is planned for the spring.

ORANGE, N. J.

Floricultural Society's Meeting.

At the regular monthly meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society, held on March 6, Mr. J. C. Williams, of Montclair, addressed the society upon "Pruning," taking the grape as an example and confining himself to the Kneiffer system upon that. In the discussion which followed other fruits were touched upon and great warmth was shown in the condemnation of the prevailing manner of shearing shrubs without regard to whether the bloom was produced upon new wood or that of last season's growth. Mr. Williams giving an instance within his knowledge where a Japan weeping cherry had been cut or shorn back upon the model of a broom. Forest trees were also discussed and the merits of fall or spring pruning when first set out, upon all. Mr. Williams called upon various members by name to respond to topics outside the field of the nurserymen, to which he confined himself, and George Smith and A. D. Rose were among those who contributed from their valuable experience.

In the business meeting preceding the discussion it was determined to repeat the feature of the school children's work at the forthcoming fall exhibition, and provision was made to supply plants in May and stage them appropriately in November at the society's competitive exhibition.

Five new volumes added to library, and one new member elected. J. B. D.

Pekin, Ill.—On Feb. 18 an accident ruptured one of the large steam boilers at the green houses of Geo. A. Kuhl. Fortunately there was a reserve boiler that helped out during the cold snap. The boilers were insured in the Fidelity and Casualty Co., of New York, and Mr. Kuhl says the company was very prompt in sending inspectors and adjusters, and that as soon as claim was made out in full and the papers could reach their office, return mail brought him a check to cover the loss. He says he cannot afford to run his steam plant without insurance of this kind.

Montreal, Can.—At the recent carnation show many fine blooms of standard sorts were shown, but the only novelties displayed were Roosevelt, from C. W. Ward; Queen Louise, from J. L. Dillon, and several fine new sorts from the Chicago Carnation Company. The latter included a magnificent red that was not labelled. It and Roosevelt and Queen Louise were awarded certificates of merit.

Springfield, O.—A. R. Aldrich, the florist, was thrown from his wagon March 2 and had his head badly cut as the result of the tumble. He was able to go home on a car.

The annual special spring number of The Florist's Review will be issued March 28. Prepare your advertisements now.

NEW CASTLE, IND.

Last Friday the South Park Floral Co. kept open house and entertained florists from all over Indiana and a few from Chicago and Cincinnati. The day was spent looking over their big range of glass and the entire party was given a fine dinner at one of the hotels, there being 46 at the table. All present report a very enjoyable and instructive day and say many pleasant things about the generous entertainment provided by the hosts of the occasion.

Mr. Peter Weiland has everything in readiness for the building of the new range of glass here and has already decided upon the varieties of carnations to be grown. One house will contain 8,200 plants of the Marquis, another 8,200 plants of the Genevieve Lord, another 5,000 Bradt's, 2,500 Gomez and 2,500 Lawson, the plants in this house to be planted closer than in the others. Another house will contain 2,500 Melba, 500 Prosperity, 500 Dorothy, 1,000 Mrs. Bartlett, 2,500 Lorna and 5,000 Pink Armazindy. Another, 6,000 White Cloud and 2,500 White Daybreak. Another with different varieties.

The asparagus house will contain 6,000 A. plumosus, 4,000 A. Sprengeri and 3,000 smilax. The roses will be mainly Beauties, Brides and Maids, and there will be 16,000 plants of roses.

BUFFALO BOWLERS.

I thought that possibly the bowlers interested in the coming convention would like to know how the Pan-American boys are doing. On March 2 a match game was played between the florists and a local team called the Delevans. While the Florists lost, it was no certain thing until the last ball was rolled. The scores follow:

THE NEW CANNA Golden Age

THIS CANNA originated on my grounds in Ocean City from seed dropped from the Florence Vaughan. The bloom is a rich golden yellow, free from spots or stripes, has five broad, full petals, which gives it the shape of a lily, is fully as large as the Italia, grows about four feet high and is a vigorous grower. The foliage is a bright green. It is a canna of the orchid type, but stands the wind and hot sun fully as well as a Crozy. For hardiness and beauty it cannot be excelled by any canna in cultivation. The first root was sold to P. S. McDonald of Philadelphia, for $2.00 his own offer; while he stood looking at them in bloom last summer. We have but a few hundred roots, and anyone who desires to get into the stock of this lovely canna had better not wait. It is the only yellow canna in existence without spots.

Strong roots that will grow (two eyes), 50c each; $5.00 per doz. Expressage prepaid.

EDWARD B. JACKSON,
STAMFORD, CONN.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Weather conditions continue very unfavorable to business and the blooming of flowers. Snow, rain, frost, more snow and sleet with a blizzard blowing, followed by a thaw, make up the weather conditions. In consequence, business was spasmodic, funeral work even was light at times, then all of a sudden a rush of orders that cleaned up carnations and kept roses within bounds. The conditions are peculiar, some are short on carnations, but have plenty of roses; some have an overstock of roses and plenty of carnations, and others are buying every flower used.

All interest is now centered in the lilies. It looks as though there was going to be a scarcity of that indispensable flower, and the majority of those that do come will be very short.

Recent visitors were George Rackham and Frank Beard, of Detroit; K. J. Kuyk's bulb agent, and A. L. Vaughan, who reports trade far better than it was last year up to the same date. G. F. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

A severe electric and hail storm passed over this city last Sunday night, but the only damage done was at the Melrose Greenhouse owned by Affleck Bros.; the glass in the four houses being about half destroyed and considerable injury done to the roses. Mr. Affleck was in one of the houses when he was startled by the patter of hail, and the next instant fragments of glass began to fall in showers, broken by hail stones which he says were as large as pigeon eggs. The damage done will amount to $1,000.

Mr. Maurice Evans, who has been confined to his bed for the past six weeks, is now slowly improving.

Mr. Gus Drobish is able to be up after a severe attack of the grip.

Mrs. E. L. Charles has been very ill with pneumonia, but is now convalescing.

C. A. Roth, the florist, was bound over to the police court for $100 for assault and battery, which occurred on March 1. G. E. A.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Trade Notes.

As might be expected, trade has fallen off slightly since the beginning of the Lenten season. The absence of large social events is most noticeable. Considerable is being done in loose flowers and funeral work and every one reports good sales. Stock of all kinds is more plentiful and of excellent quality. To dispose of the influx of violets special sales are held here every Saturday. We see no harm in offering these inducements to the public, as thousands of violets are sold which otherwise might be a total loss to the producer.

W. J. Barnes is cutting some fine bulbous stock, especially in Harrisii lilies, which brings good prices.

There is not a more enterprising man among the craft here than R. S. Brown, of Prospect avenue. Commencing in his present location twenty-five years ago, he soon built up a prosperous business, his specialty being young rooted stock. At that time there were no improvements in his vicinity; now he is hemmed in on all sides by fashionable residences. A few years ago Mr. Brown took his son Nathan into partnership. Nathan devoting his time to the cut flower department, which has flourished under his management. This firm has recently purchased a seven-acre plot at Independence, Mo., and this spring will begin building 15,000 feet of glass for the growing of cut flowers exclusively. Mr. Nathan Brown will have charge of this addition, and he is fully equal to the responsibility.

Our able park superintendent, Mr. George Kessler, gave a very instructive talk one day last week to an interested audience in the lecture room of the Library building on the preparation and care of lawns and flower beds. Owing to the great activity in suburban residence building and the consequent increased interest taken in landscape gardening, Mr. Kessler's remarks were attentively listened to and brought out a general discussion on the subject.

Three weeks ago two young men of good appearance and representing themselves as rose growers arrived in town in search of employment. Both had been with well known eastern firms and had the necessary recommendations. Carlo Sachman is filling a position with Mr. Alfred Bronan, of Independence, Mo., and John Buxton was equally successful with Mr. George M. Kellogg, Pleasant Hill, Mo.

The weather has been very changeable, all four seasons of the year being represented in the past week. We now have eight inches of snow, which arrived this morning from Kansas City, Kan. H. J. M.

RESULTS THAT PAID.

In remitting for their advertising bill under date of March 5, 1901, Messrs. Mayer & Sons, Willow Street, Lancaster Co., Pa., write: "The Review is the only one of three trade papers that has given us results that paid."

New Orleans, La.—The Mardi Gras festivities brought an unusually large number of visitors to the city this year, and business was first class with the florists. There has been a good deal of rain and a slight frost, that did no material damage.

March Prices.

Ethel Crocker has been with me all that I claimed for it, but not with some of the growers. If you can get the results I do it will be your best pink and to order to have it tried a second season I offer it free by mail for $2.50 a 100.

Elm City is a white that has given me excellent results, and as it is comparatively unknown I make the same offer with it—free by mail at $2.50 per 100.

Buy your rooted cuttings of carnations from healthy stock. Our plants are free from disease, have been grown cool and not forced in the propagating bench. We offer the following varieties and especially recommend Gen. Gomez. This carnation has proved this year the best crimson yet introduced. It is the Jack of carnations. In the New York market it commands the highest wholesale price.

EASTER PLANTS.

HEADQUARTERS FOR EASTER PLANTS.

I have an immense stock of the finest and choicest in the market, and in such quantities that exceed anything that I ever had [illegible] offered before. You would be astonished if you could take a look in seven (7) large greenhouses and an equal number of hotbeds which are filled to the fullest extent, and devoted to the entire cultivation of Easter plants alone. Therefore I will be prepared to fill all orders, if sent in time, as far as the supply will reach.

Azalea Indica. I am one of the largest importers of these choice Easter plants and have about a thousand more than last year. I raised these in large houses, 20x115 feet, erected for the cultivation solely of these plants. The azaleas were selected by myself last fall on my second trip to Belgium and as I am agent for a large concern there it gives you a chance to purchase your goods at first hand and not through a middleman. I have only new stock, none left over from a year ago. I can offer you plants in bloom, or buds, blooming Easter week, 6 in. pots, 60c, 75c and some for [illegible]. Most of them Mme. Vander Cruyssen, and some other of the best varieties which will be selected by myself. I have some fine specimen plants, 10-11 in. pots, 20-22 inches across, [illegible] large (Mme. Vander Cruyssen), of good shape and full of buds, $[illegible] each, easily worth [illegible]. Weight, with pots, 37 lbs., weight without pots, 17 lbs.

Araucaria excelsa and glauca in excellent shape, 3 tiers, 5 in. pots, 60c, 75c and $1.00 each. Very fine specimens, $1.50 and $2.00 each, worth $3.00.

Spiraeas compacta and floribunda. Fine bushy plants, my own importation, perfect jewels, 5½-6-in. pots, $3.00 per doz. Specimen plants $4.00 per doz.

Hyydrangea (Pink). 5½-6-in. pots, $3.00 to $4.00 per doz.

Cineraria hybrida. Choice colors, 6-in. pots $2.50, $3.00 and $4.00 per doz. In bloom now or at Easter. I have a house full of them.

Begonias. President Carnot and Semperflorens giganteum, also some other varieties, 6-in pots, $3.00 to $4.00 per doz. Vernon and other good blooming varieties, 4-in. pots, $1.20 per doz.

Daisies (white) Marguerite. Fine bushy plants 5-in. pots, $2.00 per doz.; 4-in., $1.00 per doz.

Liliums Longiflorum and Harrisii. Fine plants, raised from bulbs 7x9, obtained of the well known firm of Henry F. Michell. 6-in pots (from 5 to 10 buds to a plant), at the rate of 10c per bud. Height, 1½ to 2½ feet. No lilies sold by themselves; other plants must accompany them.

Cyperus (Umbrella plants), 4-in. pots, $1.00 per doz.

Corypha australis (Palms), fine plants, 14-18 in. high, 5-5½-in. pots, 50c each.

Dracaena indivisa (imported), for decoration, 6-in. pots, 50c each.

Hyacinths (Dutch named), strictly my own importation, raised from bulbs that cost from $6.00 to $8.25 per 100. These fine hyacinths I am selling at the rate of $10.00 per 100; extra choice, $12.00.

Tournesol Tulips (double red and yellow striped), 3 in a 4-in. pot. They are simply beautiful and sell at sight. $1.50 per doz. pots.

Daffodils (Von Sion), 3 in a 5-in. pot, from $1.50 to $1.75 per doz. pots.

Geraniums, 3-in. pots, Mme. Thibaut, Pilot, and some other good varieties, $5.00 per 100.

Cash with order, please. Money can be sent safe by express, postal money order, registered letter or drafts on Philadelphia or New York banks. At such a busy time (packing and shipping) I have no time to inquire into recommendation letters. All goods shipped at purchaser's risk.

GODFREY ASCHMANN,

Burpee's Earliest of All is the Sweet Pea for florists. Notwithstanding their dwarf habit and neat slender foliage, the plants are of vigorous growth and come into bloom always ten days to two weeks in advance of the Extra Early Blanche Ferry, which has been heretofore a week ahead of all other varieties. The flowers are as large as those of the regular strains of Blanche Ferry, and have long stout stems, making them entirely satisfactory for cutting; they are borne in close clusters of three, all facing one way. The standards are a bright, rich pink, while the wings are nearly pure white. Burpee's "Earliest of All" is not only the earliest to bloom in open ground, but is also the most desirable for forcing under glass for winter cut-flowers. The dwarf habit of this variety renders it much more easily grown on the benches, admits of closer planting, and from seed sown during the latter part of August blooms may be cut during the holidays, while with the taller varieties no blooms could be had before February or March. Per pkt. 5 cts.; oz. 6 cts.; ¼ lb. 20 cts.; per lb. 60cts.; 5 lbs. or more at 55 cts. per lb.

CORRECTION.—In the classified adv. of E. B. Jennings under the heading "Pansy Plants" in our last issue an error crept in making it appear that the plants were offered by express prepaid, when it should have read merely "$4 per 1,000 by express."

YORK, PA.—Mr. Augustus Doll, for many years engaged in the business, corner Market St. and Ehert's Lane, on account of his health will retire from business about July 1, he having sold the greenhouses, boilers, etc., except the plants, to Charles E. Smith, florist, who will remove the same after July 1 to his place on Jackson Ave.

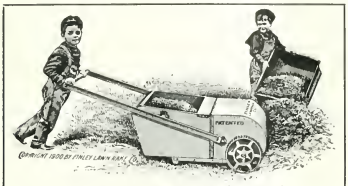
If you have a Lawn

You will want a FINLEY ROTARY LAWN RAKE this spring and you should have it early. It will not only save lots of work but it will do it better than it can possibly be done by hand. It will enable you to clean the lawn easily and effectively in the spring and to keep it clean all summer. It will enable you to kill the crab grass and other pests. It takes up grass, either long or short, twigs and every litter of any kind. stones included. a hand rake will not touch. save its cost in a few days on any size lawn.



The Finley Rotary Lawn Rake in operation.

Price $12.00. IT WAS GIVEN A CERTIFICATE OF MERIT by the Society of American Florists at the New York Convention, the judges reporting that they "Believe it to be far superior to anything else in the market."

PINK AMERICAN BEAUTY.

"We are convinced that this variety is a valuable addition to the list of forcing roses, being in every respect, except color, the exact counterpart of the American Beauty. The color is a beautiful bright pink, which is good, even in the full flowers. The fragrance is also as fine as that of Beauty, and the exhibited blooms showed remarkable vigor."

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Propagating.

There are only a few weeks left when propagating soft wooded stuff can be done with ease and certainty, so make the best use you can of the next two weeks. When the bright suns of April arrive the extra heat entails much more care and watchfulness. Nearly all the soft wooded, quick growing plants such as salvia, ageratum, heliotrope, etc., are better propagated as late as this because they make plants of ample size and do not get stunted and unshapely by bedding time. Coleus we continue to propagate till end of May, but that will root at any time with heat and water.

Caladiums.

It is a good time now to start Caladium esculentum. There seems to always be a demand for these big leaved plants; cut the root well up to the sound last year's bulb. The new roots don't come from the bottom of the bulb but from all over its surface. We find time and space saved by putting the bulbs thickly in flats in three inches of sand or sandy soil, and if the flats can be placed a little above some hot water pipes the bulbs will start very quickly and soon throw out lots of roots. Don't let them make much top growth in this position or they will be weak. In about three weeks they will be in good order for potting into 5 or 6-inch pots and will need from that on the lightest, brightest and airiest house. If they are induced to make large, soft leaves they are sure to lose them when put out of doors and are then several weeks behind the smaller but more hardened plants.

Cannas.

Every one seems to believe that the popular canna will be in as great demand as ever, and even more so, and why not? There is something so suited to our semi-tropical climate about these stately and beautiful plants. It is a good time now to start the main lot. I have sometimes advised putting them in flats of sandy soil and placing the flats on pipes, and it gives them a quick start, but they must remain there but a short time. If you have a bench in a warm house it is just as well and better. Spread an inch of sphagnum on the bench and put the roots on it and then moss enough between them to about cover them, keeping the moss moist. They soon make a start and can be lifted and potted as soon as the roots have made a good start. The remarks about light and air apply to the canna equally as well as to the caladium. A stout, hardy growth is what is needed.

Seed Sowing.

By this time in the month the general crop of asters and other so called hardy annuals should be sown. We presume you have some asters sown a month ago, but now is a good time for the main crop. Marigolds, ten week stocks, Phlox Drummondii, or any other summer annual, can now be sown. Balsams are very rapid growers and do not want anything but a high temperature so they can be delayed till early in April.

The "art" of sowing seeds has been so often described that I would not venture to dilate on it here. A few good rules, however, are: Cover the seeds about the depth of themselves and keep them uniformly moist. A sudden parching of the soil just as the seeds sprout has often been the cause of the seedsman being blamed.

Till the growth is above ground any amount of shade can be given, or even the flats or pans covered with a cloth, but directly they are above ground they must have daylight without bright sun, and as the little plants grow they must have the fullest light or they will be spindling, which is a bad start. As these annuals take up lots of room when pricked out into flats we try to manage to keep them in the seed pans till after Easter, and then we have either room inside or it is warm enough for them in a cold frame.

Cobea Scandens.

A seed of different nature entirely is that of Cobea scandens, one of the most useful summer climbers we have. Sow it now; there is plenty of time. There is a right end to put in the soil but it is difficult to describe and the safest way for those who do not know the right end is to sow the seed on edge. Just squeeze the seed into the soil edgewise and no covering of soil is needed. Keep in a temperature of 60 degrees and moderately moist and they will soon start. They should be potted off singly into 2½-inch pots directly they show their character leaves, or rather growth.

Pansies.

Those who grow a few thousand pansies in frames for early use in vases must now keep a sharp lookout if they want good, sturdy plants. With a covering of snow or hemlock boughs they have been doing well all winter, but now they want the glass over them and must be growing. Every day when the sun shines don't neglect giving plenty of air or your plants will be spindling and useless.

Chrysanthemums.

There is no better time than from now on to start your chrysanthemum stock, and we need it. There is no such thing as doing without the mums. When the meadow lark flies south and our woods turn scarlet and yellow we look with joy at the opening petals of the autumn queen.

Cuttings rooted in May, or even June, make just as good commercial flowers as any, but we can't root them all then, and must make use of all available cuttings from now on. With late cuttings you often hear complaints of their not rooting well. The trouble is you don't keep them wet enough. You should never let them wilt. Soak them twice a day and keep the sun off them.

The varieties are too many for me to attempt to know even the best. I was much impressed last year with the great excellence of the grand yellow, Colonel Appleton, and although rather late for me to acknowledge it, W. H. Chadwick is a white of the very first order. It is easier to grow and a finer all around variety than the great Mrs. Robinson. Whoever intends to grow for exhibition cannot possibly dispense with Timothy Eaton, the great Canadian white, because in size and weight it will make any other mum look like thirty cents.

You often hear the remark, "My trade does not call for very large flowers." But if you can grow a large flower in the same space as a smaller one you are better off for I have never seen the customer who would not choose the large flowers if at the same price. Like dear, sweet Josina Vokes, who delighted millions in "The Milliner's Bill," she snatched two books from the shelf and without looking at their titles said: "I'll take the big one."

Easter Plants.

I can't add much to my notes of two weeks ago on this important matter. Don't get nervous. The last two weeks does wonders, particularly if we get a bright warm spell, which with us is about due. I remarked before that I do not believe in putting lilies into a cool house till the first buds are ready to open or they will with a sudden check stand quite still, and if the buds begin to open two weeks before Easter they are then in a cool house just right.

I see some neighbors are getting in their bulbs much ahead of time. You must remember that the hyacinths and daffodils are pushing up fast out of doors now and two weeks in a light house is all the time you want. Spiraea is a flower you want well out. People do not expect it to be a lasting plant and they want all the show they can get.

Azaleas differ very much in their time of flowering, and that you have doubtless looked out for. The early varieties, of which Van der Cruyssen is the best type, will need a cool, heavily shaded house, while the later varieties will take a good brisk heat for the last two weeks. You cannot expect to get all the plants in flower that you would wish to without a continual watchfulness and labor. Many moves and contrivances will have to be resorted to and it is wonderful what your fertile brain will think of if you have your heart in the business. Both the "heart" and "fertile brain" are used, of course, figuratively, as the heart has quite a different function and the brain's fertility could be better expressed by saying that a clear head and observing eye will be productive of healthy molecular action of the gray matter.

Excuse this psychological deviation. It's a relief sometimes, don't you know. But to be more matter of fact, let me conclude by saying that above all things that is inexcusable is to have green-fly on your plants when sold, or the odor of tobacco. I don't know of any plants that are in bloom for Easter that are at all hurt by a moderate fumigation, and do all the smoking that is necessary at least a week before the plants are to be sold.

CARNATION TROUBLES.

Please tell me what makes my carnation buds blast. The buds all come soft like the sample sent but all are blasted and have been so all winter. The plants look healthy. Most of the soil is the same that grew a crop of carnations last year, with about two inches of fresh soil added and a wheelbarrow full of manure to each ten feet of bench five feet wide. The soil is alive with fish worms and there has been some gas in greenhouse from furnace. Temperature 45 to 50 degrees at night. Do you think I had better throw the plants out? The varieties are Portia, McGowan, Daybreak and Alaska. H. R. B.

The carnation buds sent were so dried up that they were of no use in determining the cause of the trouble. According to the letter the conditions under which the carnations are growing are such that I am inclined to think there are several faults at the bottom of the trouble. In the first place there is no use trying to grow carnations or any other flowers in a house where there is more or less gas most of the time. It may have gotten strong enough to injure the buds when they were small and tender. The presence of fish worms is not conducive to good health and there is no excuse for any grower to have many of them around.

I do not approve of using the same soil two seasons on shallow benches, as it is very likely to be pretty well exhausted after the first season if the carnations make a good growth. The manure that was added would help some, but some bone and lime or wood-ashes should have been added as well if it was necessary to use the old soil over again. I have seen old soil used again after it had lain outside exposed to the weather a year with good results.

Now, if I am right in my opinion there ought to be no trouble in getting these plants into fairly good shape again at this time of the year when they naturally make a strong growth and outgrow many other diseases. Sprinkle a good handful of slaked lime between each row and water in well to get rid of the fish worms and give plenty of air both day and night to allow whatever gas there is to pass out of the ventilators. In about ten days give a light dressing of bone mixed in soil, about a 5-inch pot of bone to each bushel of soil and put on about ¼-inch thick. Keep the temperature about 50 degrees at night.

I would not advise propagating from these plants because it might possibly be some disease or blight that is causing the trouble. Better buy new stock and while you are buying get newer and better varieties. McGowan and Alaska are not nearly as good as Flora Hill and White Cloud, and Portia is away behind Jubilee, Crane and America. Daybreak does fairly well yet and on some places it is still really fine.

If I had these plants I would throw them out and replant at once with young stock for next season. It is early, but they would well repay you for the early start, now while it is cool and they can become well established before hot weather comes. The red varieties especially would appreciate it.

The Easter Cut.

When this reaches you there will be only two weeks before Easter and every grower is anxious to cut as many blooms as possible for that day and how we all watch the weather and the almanac and how we do swear at the weather man when he predicts rain for tomorrow, etc. Isn't it too bad that we florists can't make the weather? Don't force your plants to death with artificial heat if the sun fails to supply the warmth and light you need to open up the buds. A few degrees will not injure the plants, but raise the temperature gradually, a degree each night, etc.

If the weather is cloudy you can save up the blooms ten days, but if it is warm and bright you had better pick them right along up to a week before Easter and you will then have plenty of blooms to cut the latter part of the week. Easter is apt to be warm and pickled stock fares worse even than it does at Xmas, so be careful how you manage your cut, especially if you have to ship them. A. F. J. Baur.

ABOUT CARNATIONS.

While everybody's attention is directed to carnations I would like to mention one thing that I have not seen touched upon.

We watch the reports of the different growers in their trade lists and after a number of years' comparisons have come to the conclusion that the soil and conditions under which Messrs. F. Dorner & Sons grow most nearly coincide with our own. The notes and comments they make on varieties are nearly always what we would make on the same kinds which we have grown. The point I want to make is: If the grower of a small or medium quantity of carnations would make it a rule to read these reports carefully from year to year, after a few years he would find one whose conditions seemed very much like his own, then as a general thing he would be pretty safe in trying the new varieties that do well with this grower.

Very likely many are following this plan but I do not remember having seen it mentioned. It really saves one or two years' trial for the grower who is limited as to space and means to experiment for himself, and the smaller grower cannot afford to try the novelties the first year at the fancy prices.

But, by the way, the high priced stock of the introducer or grower who makes stock a specialty, is often cheaper than low priced stock from others. I have had an example of this lately, getting poor, slim, weak, sickly stuff that was really dear at any price. I shall always think of that concern as trying to have too much stock to sell at bargain prices. Next time I shall not fail to order from the man that does not offer at a lower price than he can offer first class cuttings for, even if my pocketbook causes me to order a smaller quantity, for I would rather have a dozen good plants than twenty-five sickly ones.

Speaking of the Marquis, while we have not enough of it for a fair trial, still as it has gone so far, it has given us only two flowers per plant from Jan. 1 to March 16 and this is a very poor showing, even though the flowers are so nice when you get them. Of course we shall grow some another year and try to get better results by different treatment, but I agree with Mr. Baur that the introducers should give us more explicit directions when they first send out a variety.

Why does not someone report their record of cuts from different varieties? I have been watching for them for some time but no one seems to come to the front. I would really like to know what the good grower considers a good average.

THE MARQUIS.

While the discussion waxes warm over the merits and demerits of The Marquis it might be of interest to your readers to know of its behavior out here in the west.

It gives me pleasure to say that from the beginning to the finish The Marquis as grown here has been entirely satisfactory. Mr. Stuppy is the only florist here that grows this carnation in quantity. The plants are never planted out in the field, but are shifted into 4-inch pots and given cold-frame treatment for six weeks. Planted in the house August 1st they began blooming October 1st, and have been at it ever since. Mr. Stuppy grows all of the newer varieties to perfection, but especially recommends The Marquis to florists who grow and retail their own carnations.

THE HOUSE OF WHITE CLOUD.

Referring to the engraving of house of White Cloud carnations that appeared in our last issue, Mr. N. Wietor says it hardly does the house justice, as the photographer arrived shortly after 2,200 flowers had been cut from it. He adds that not less than 2,000 flowers a day have been cut from that house for thirty successive days.

Their carnations seem to be extra good keepers and to always have good, strong stems, and this is undoubtedly the result of the fact that they keep air on almost all the time and maintain a very low temperature. The houses are often as low as 38 to 40 degrees, and even lower at times. Nevertheless they get quantity as well as quality.

ROSES.

[Some General Remarks on Roses by Benjamin Durfee American Rose Co., Washington, D. C., before the Chicago Florists' Club, March 15, 1901.]

It is fair, I think, to estimate that the average retail florist requires in his stock fully 75 per cent of white flowers. This applies with full force to roses. Today we have in general commerce but two white roses: Bride and Kaiserin. The Bride a sport from Catherine Mermet; the Kaiserin a seedling by P. Lambert of Germany. We were fortunate in being one of the pioneers in the introduction of Kaiserin.

Let us analyze the good and bad points of these two roses: In the Bride we have during winter a large, fine white bud, with fairly good foliage and free blooming, when well grown, but apt to come knotty and deformed in bad weather, and liable to have weak stems in the hands of any but the most skilful growers. This rose, however, becomes very small when the warm weather strikes it. It is a good shipper and a fairly good keeper, but flat and unshapely when wide open. It is somewhat of a cropper, but may be well classified among the best of the everblooming teas.

It must, therefore, be supplemented by a good white summer bloomer, and this you have in Kaiserin, one of the most beautiful of all roses. But Kaiserin is not a good shipper, nor is it a good winter bloomer except in far southern climates. It has a tendency to black spot, and it is not quite rapid enough in its growth, nor quite free enough of bloom. I might possibly add to these the White Maman Cochet, the use of which for out-door cut is developing in the East. With the two roses, however, the florist can cover the entire year fairly well.

Consequently, what the grower is in need of is a good all-the-year-round white rose, and this we are convinced from a five years' test will be found in the White Golden Gate. But let me give you our estimate of the qualities which a rose should possess in order to be a commercial florist's rose. It is very difficult to name in order of importance the many necessary elements; but if it had every other qualification and was a shy bloomer it would be utterly worthless to the commercial grower. I do not believe we ought to go outside of the strictly pure tea rose unless we are compelled to do so. Almost every hybrid tea retains too much of the spirit of rest which flows in the blood of the hybrid perpetual. But the tea rose is like you western florists, you hustlers of the Universe, you active, progressive elements of our profession, to whom I have come 806 miles to make my bow. Your Reinbergs and Bassetts and Washburns, your Wietors and Weilands, and the hundreds of others who within a decade have piled more florists' glass over the earth than can be found east of the Alleghanies. Like you western florists, the tea rose never rests, and should be your handmaiden.

But to return to our estimate of the necessary qualifications of a white rose, and they are freedom of bloom, good shipping and keeping qualities, thick leathery petals, erect long stems, large flowers the year through, rapid but not soft growth, freedom from black spot, strong root action, fragrance, good color, no hybrid blood in its veins. These are the general and most important requirements, and they are rarely to be met with assembled in any one variety. Some of the most necessary of these qualifications can only be discovered by an investigation of the growing plant, by personal inspection and custody of flower and plant for a long period of time. Consequently in a competitive exhibit the scale of points fails to cover such vital commercial elements as the keeping and shipping quality, freedom of bloom, habit of growth, freedom from disease.

From the commercial standpoint freedom of bloom would seem to be entitled to the most points, with keeping and shipping qualities a close second. And this brings me to the point of emphasizing the necessity of close observation of the growing plants when forming judgment of a novelty rose. Take for illustration the scale of points formulated by the American Rose Society for novelties: Size, 10; color, 20; stem, 15, substance, 10; foliage, 15; fragrance, 5; distinctiveness, 10; total, 100. As a commercial grower of roses under glass for cut flowers we will suppose the fact is proven to you that a certain novelty produces twice as many flowers during the period from December 15 to February 15 as American Beauty, but that it is neither more fragrant nor better colored, but is simply equal to American Beauty in all respects. I ask why those two elements should be allotted 15 points? Why in a white rose should color be assigned 20 points? This might be a correct proportion of points of color in regard to pink or red or yellow, but the line of demarcation in white is not a pronounced characteristic. When the Mermet sported into Bride what governed your judgment? Would anybody have grown Bride if it had been a shy bloomer? and yet that quality did not figure in the scale of points. It, therefore, seems as though the judges should not be barred from using their judgment, nor be compelled to pro rate the percentages according to a fixed standard.

The consideration of the Bride leads inevitably to the great distinction that should be made between a seedling and a sport, especially if the sport is from a standard commercial variety of many years' standing whose every good and bad characteristic is known to the profession. In the case of a seedling many of the defects may be concealed by the introducer. He may succeed in winning the whole gamut of gold and silver medals and certificates, and yet palm upon the purchaser a very unprofitable rose. The size, color, fragrance, stem, form, substance, foliage and distinctiveness may be of perfect standards, and thus yield 100 on the scale of points, but where will the grower be if the product of flowers is of the smallest? or the sleepy jade cannot be roused by any stimulating influences in winter; or if black spot skins off the 100 per cent of grand foliage, leaving nothing but the 100 per cent flower at the end of the 100 per cent stem?

Not so, however, with a sport from a standard variety, such as I have alluded to. You start out with a thorough knowledge of all its traits both good and bad. Thus we know that the Bride, like its parent, produces a very small flower during the month of May and to November; that it has a tendency to produce weak stems and much blind wood, etc. So with the White Golden Gate, it has the characteristics of the Golden Gate from which it sported five years ago; and those of you who grow Golden Gate know its qualities, both good and bad.

Perhaps a few historical words about Golden Gate, its characteristics, etc., may interest you. Golden Gate was introduced to the trade, I think, about 1890 or 1891, by Dingee & Conard of West Grove, Pa. It is said to have come out of Safrano crossed with Cornelia Cook, although there are some suggestions in the foliage of Niphetos' blood. The characteristics of Cornelia Cook predominate in nearly every element of growth and bloom, although it reproduces much more rapidly than its parent.

It has a strong tendency to break from the base and these canes, if allowed to bloom unchecked, produce enormous flowers. For many years, however, we have treated these growths as you would a mum. When the shoot has reached a height of about thirty inches we disbud by breaking off about four or five inches of the top. From two to six side shoots will then quickly break, as the flow of sap is very active, and the flowers exhibited here of the White Golden Gate are all from side shoots, or, as you say in chrysanthemum lore, the terminal buds. Of course when I describe Golden Gate I describe White Golden Gate, for they are identical in every way except color. For our commercial purposes these buds are of ample size.

The result of disbudding you will readily perceive is a very large crop of good standard sized flowers. The plants are grown on benches in from 2½ to 3 inches of soil, top-dressed with a mulch half manure, half soil, twice during the season, and fed after the 1st of January with ordinary manure water. They are grown on their own roots, although Mr. Reuter, of Westerly, R. I., and Mr. Pierson, of Cromwell, Conn., used grafts in preference; but I see no need for grafted stock when their own roots are so very vigorous. The Golden Gate has had a hard struggle but to-day it stands the peer of any tea rose in commercial use. With this fact established, however, there must always be a limited demand in this country of high colors for the dainty porcelain coloring of Golden Gate; but the demand for White Golden Gate must necessarily be enormous, as it will very quickly displace all other commercial whites.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES.

Propagating.

The cutting benches just now are kept in full swing propagating bedding stock and such like and oftentimes the earlier batches of mum cuttings are crowded in consequence.

It is a great mistake, and would be better by far to defer the propagation of the mums till later when much of the other stock will be out of the way. Overcrowding in the cutting bench is the reason why so much of the stock seen around in early spring is so spindly and wiry looking. Such stock never comes away freely with clean thrifty foliage and stocky short jointed growth, which is the only kind of growth you want to get for best results.

If you have the space to spare in the cutting bench and the cuttings themselves are in good condition it is well to get in all the stock you can this month of the slow growing dwarf kinds: Bonnaffon, Jerome Jones, Glory of the Pacific and such kinds.

A new variety to America named Nellie Pockett that is being sent out this season is notably dwarf. We have plants of it that have been growing for weeks past and are not yet two inches in height. It is a lovely thing, and for side benches its dwarf habit is just the thing. Mrs. Barkley, an immense rose pink flower, is another very dwarf habited variety. Mrs. Barkley is "English, you know," and the largest flowers exhibited there the past season were of this variety.

In taking cuttings always be careful to select only the suckers that come up around the base of the old stem. These will always give satisfaction, while cuttings that form on the old stem will, nine times out of ten, begin to throw buds as soon as they begin to grow, and you will have to wait until they produce a sucker from the bottom before they will make decent plants.

V. Morel is a variety that produces a bud any way, no matter whether you take a sucker or stem cutting, and the only way to handle this superb old variety seems to be to pot it up after rooting, and when a strong growth appears coming from the bottom let it go on growing and cut away the original plant. Every variety that grows has its own little peculiarities and these must be noted and understood by the grower, who is looking for the largest measure of success.

Keeping the Stock Clean.

Always see that the cuttings are clean and free from any disease before putting in the bench. You may think, "Oh, it isn't so necessary as all that, the mum will grow out of a little leaf spot all right," and so on but it's just as easy to begin right as any other way.

Clean the cuttings of all aphis, black, green or any other color, and if you have any rust on your plants this is the time to get rid of it. A few spores left unnoticed on the young plants now will by next summer furnish enough to go all through your stock. The scientists tell us that the winter spores (or teleutospores) of this disease will remain dormant all winter and will not germinate until the following spring. It may be so, but we have noticed this disease on some varieties every month in the year.

Whether you have any rust on your plants or not, it is always wise as a precaution to spray your stock at intervals throughout the early part of the year with a solution of potassium sulphide, half an ounce to a gallon of water. This solution, while not exactly conveying to the senses the perfumes of Araby the blest, we have always found to be effective in destroying the spores, providing it is carefully syringed on the under side of the leaves. If the plants are in pots the most effectual way is to dip them in the solution. If the plants are very soft in their growth it may injure the extreme tips of the young leaves but they will soon grow out of it all right. This disease has never been so bad in this country as it has in Britain, our hot, dry summers not being so favorable to its development as the humid atmosphere of the "other side."

Exhibition Blooms.

A correspondent wishes to know how to get the largest number of exhibition blooms from a bench thirty feet by seven feet, citing three different methods he has in view:

1. Cuttings rooted early in March and finally potted in nine-inch boxes, taking three shoots to a plant.

2. Cuttings rooted early part of May, planted eight inches by ten and kept to single stem.

3. Cuttings rooted early in June, potted into six-inch pots, kept to single stem. Economy to be also a factor in the final results.

Unquestionably the most economical way and, to my mind, the best results would be accomplished by No. 2 method. The economy lies in the fact that the plants being planted out would not need nearly the water that the pots or boxes would, and, consequently, cost less to grow, not in the cost of the water, but the labor of applying it. We have grown splendid flowers in boxes, but not the finest exhibition flowers from three shoots to a plant. The advantage of pots or boxes is that they can be moved around into another house if desired, but if the plants can remain to flower in the same house I would always plant out on the bench.

If your correspondent is going in for exhibiting he ought to have a small batch of plants in six-inch pots. While they will not make such large flowers as the single stems planted out, they will make a nice showing, and most exhibitions have a class reserved for such plants exhibited in pots as grown. The greatest number of flowers would be produced, of course, by taking up three shoots to a plant but such quantity is always at the expense of quality. Brian Boru.

PANDANUS SANDERI.

I had the pleasure of seeing Pandanus Sanderi in its new home at Dreer's nursery, Riverton, N. J., recently and of hearing Mr. Eisele talk of his trip to Europe and this new Pandanus that he brought home with him.

It is beautifully variegated in green and gold on every leaf, the coloring being pronounced even on the bottom leaves. The foliage appeared longer and narrower than that of Pandanus Veitchii, and Mr. Eisele thought that in habit the new plant was distinct from the old, his idea being that the center leaves of P. Sanderi were less erect when first thrown up than those of P. Veitchii.

The coloring and general effect of this new Pandanus reminded me strongly of the variegated pincapple (Ananas sativa variegata), only there is a vigor and life about this plant which is lacking in the variegated pineapple. Mr. Eisele explained that the plants we saw were but a small vanguard, the entire stock being expected later; in time he hoped to send a big specimen plant to the coming rose show in New York.

Great credit is due the H. A. Dreer Company for securing this gem of the tropics, which has such a promising future before it. Phil.

There has been some discussion of late about the description of this plant, but after the discussion is over the fact remains that the plant in question is a splendid thing and is bound to have a phenomenal sale. For brilliancy of coloring Pandanus Veitchii is simply nowhere alongside of it.

I saw a large batch of plants in Messrs. Sander's nursery on Dec. 24 last. It was a dreary, foggy day and coming into the house where P. Sanderi was growing it seemed by contrast a blaze of sunshine. I thought at the time it was one of the handsomest plants I ever saw. They have quite a number of novelties in the plant line but nothing in my opinion like the plant in question. Pandanus Sanderi has certainly come to stay.

LILY OF THE VALLEY.

By H. N Burns.

[Read before the Chicago Florists' Club, March 15.]

In response to your request I have pleasure in speaking to you about this particular flower. As most of you know I grow some of them all the year around. I have had good success the last few seasons, though I did not grow very many lately as it was not satisfactory. In our trade papers there have repeatedly appeared very good articles on forcing lily of the valley from prominent men and I would rather confine myself tonight to the stock to be used for forcing. This is undoubtedly the most important point in forcing valley successfully and too much care cannot be used in procuring the right stock.

Pips to be used for early forcing should have been grown in light, warm soil; it is immaterial whether a sandy soil or a good cultivated garden soil. Pips grown on a damp, cold place, or in a heavy loam, should be used only for late forcing.

Good pips for early forcing should be strong, solid, run even, and must have plenty of fine, long, white roots that start right from the pips. These signs will assure you that the pips have been well taken care of and cultivated. Stock like that can always be depended upon to give good satisfaction providing they get proper treatment.

For late forcing I use stock grown on heavy soil. The roots are shorter and coarser, but the pips should be strong and evenly assorted. Here I find trouble sometimes, particularly when the season was rather moist. The lower bells are too far advanced in the pips and in growing they fade before the valley is fully developed. Most of the time I find this trouble with the strongest pips grown on heavy and damp soil. It is therefore advisable to look upon such stock, as well as unevenly assorted pips, with suspicion. My shipper keeps me informed as to where the different kinds were grown and how the season has been as this is very important to know.

Mr. August Jurgens was to have read a paper on the same subject but had failed to prepare anything. When called upon he said that an important point in valley forcing was to heel the pips into soil just as soon as received and not allow the pips to dry out. He said that to get really first class valley it must be grown cool and given plenty of time to develop. If forced fast you get stem but at the expense of the flowers. The flowers must have time to develop and this process cannot be successfully forced. The temperature varies, of course, with the season. His early valley he gives 85 to 90 degrees, but later crops get only 75 to 80 degrees. He had found that the most expensive pips were the most profitable to force as the poorer average of flowers from the cheaper pips made them most costly in the end. Every batch must be treated differently and he learns something new every year.

He displayed a bunch of very fine valley that excited the admiration of all. These were from pips put in February 7. He was pessimistic, though, as regards the profit in forcing valley. His experience had been that the demand was very uncertain and irregular and that the demand was generally strongest when he had but a few and discouragingly light when he had a good lot.

Mr. Buettner took another fall out of the retailers for not encouraging the sale of valley. They seemed never to buy it for regular stock, he said, but bought it only when it was specially called for and then they would want a big lot and wondered why the grower couldn't supply it. He said there was too much of a tendency among the retailers to hunt for flowers that would cover a big space in a funeral design and that they would better spend some of their time in catering to and developing a taste for something better. He took the bunch of valley, spread it out loosely and said that such a bunch placed on the counter would sell, but that a much greater demand would be developed if the retailer were to make it up in some pretty, dainty combination. He said that the average retailer took the bunches just as they came from the grower, jammed several of them together in a crude looking jar and then was disgusted when customers passed it by.

AN EMPLOYES' ASSOCIATION.

Editor FLORISTS' REVIEW:

I have read with much interest the paper read by Herman Knope before the Detroit Florists' Club and printed in your paper. He certainly brings out some points worthy of consideration. But how to improve the situation is the question.

Would it not be a good idea for employes to have an association, admitting only good men and excluding all the skates and big mouths and get together on their own account. I am sure they could advance their own interests and those of honest employers too, by an organization if broad enough in its aims and character.

How would it do to try to get together at the time of the S. A. F. convention in Buffalo next August? I would make an effort to attend the meeting if one should be arranged for and would be willing to sign my name to a call if a dozen or fifteen others will do likewise.

Or, if this isn't considered practicable, why couldn't we form local organizations and then send delegates to Buffalo to perfect a national body or federation? I hope the REVIEW will give space to this and to a further discussion of the matter. EMPLOYE.

[Certainly the suggested action could do no harm and might accomplish much good. We are perfectly willing to print further communications on the subject providing they are brief and pertinent. —ED.]

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market has continued exceedingly active for the season. Good stock is in demand and some things were actually scarce early last week. Later in the week white carnations were much sought after, the price stiffening a little on the latter in consequence. John Wanamaker's "Silver Jubilee" was thought to be partly responsible for this shortage in white, as he used carnations of that color freely at his store. But the brisk demands continued after the "Jubilee" was over. Speaking of white carnations, it is said that the bulk of the stock grown around here is still "Lizzie McGowan." This is rather surprising, as one hears chiefly of the novelties.

Violets are awfully plentiful, the street being actually blue with them at times. Bulbous stock is hardly so plentiful; it moves fairly well, but the margin of profit must be extremely small at prevailing prices.

Quotations are about as follows: Beauties, short, $1.25 to $1.50 a dozen; medium, $2 to $3; fancy, $4 to $5 (this grade goes slowly); Teas, $3 to $5 for small, the latter figure for white; specials, $8 to $10. Carnations, fancy, $3 to $4, a few $5; ordinary, $1.50 to $2. Violets and bulbous stock remain unchanged.

Easter Outlook.

The outlook for Easter is excellent. There will be more plants and better plants than ever before, and that is saying a good deal; a decided improvement since the advent of the disease in lilies. The bulk of the stock will be Japan grown longiflorums. Our growers are learning how to do them now. The plants are taller than last season, about 3 to 3½ feet high, and the flowers while not quite as large as the Bermuda grown, are very much finer than I have seen them before. Another point is that the plants average more flowers to a stem than was generally seen in the past. Taken all in all, I think our exack retailers can once more handle lilies with satisfaction. But they are not going to be very plentiful, and the wise dealer will pick out his stock in time. It won't pay to wait this year.

Crimson Rambler is another strong item on the Easter list. This rose is no longer a novelty; it is, however, a really good thing and is in some places better done than last year, the plants being more shapely and very well set with buds. Azaleas, genistas and spireas promise well. It is a little early to speak with certainty about deutzias, and the same is true in a different way about hydrangeas, for while deutzias must be just right in development, hydrangeas must be just right in color to prove quick sellers in the critical market of today. There are lots of other good blooming plants, but these, with the bulbs, form the staple articles that most interest our growers and retailers.

Various Items.

The effect of the good winter's business in cut flowers is beginning to appear at Chestnut Hill. John Burton is about to erect a range of glass (that is the up-to-date expression) on ground near his present houses. He proposes building six houses, each 25x150, to be heated by steam. The houses will be devoted to growing roses for cut flowers.

H. H. Battles has closed a contract for two houses, each 25x175 feet, with an 8-foot north side propagating house and a shed. This plant is to be erected on Mr. Battles' place at Newtown Square, and it is understood will not be devoted to growing standard varieties of cut flowers, the plan being to grow some of the things a first-class retailer requires and that are sometimes difficult to get. This information should reassure the rose and carnation men, but the growers of asparagus may not be so safe.

Harry Faust, of Merion, has a fine lot of Japan grown Lilium longiflorum.

George Anderson has a house of Ulrich Brunner that are thought to be just right for Easter. The plants are two years' bench grown and are in fine shape. It is the only house of this rose on the place.

John Walker and George McLean, who started in business last fall at Youngstown, Ohio, are encouraged by the result of their first winter's work. Their store has done well and the greenhouses will do better when they can reap what they sow instead of what somebody else sowed.

William Berger, of Germantown, is erecting a show house in the rear of his store. This greenhouse is to be ready for Easter.

Joseph Heacock is cutting some superb White Cloud that are bringing $4 a hundred.

In honor of St. Patrick's day much shamrock was seen, some of it in quaint little pans shaped like a shamrock leaf. One of the department stores gave away a large counter full of these little clover-like favorites. You wrote your name and address, or somebody else's name and address on a slip and the lucky people were to have a pot of shamrock sent to them.

William J. Moore is and has been receiving very fine Beauties and Maids from Burton's greenhouses, William Munro, manager.

Some floral work went from this city to the funeral of ex-President Harrison.

The Market.

The market this week seems much better than last week. The overstock is not so great as it has been except in bulb stock which remains about the same. The weather is fine and conditions are ideal for producing quantity and quality.

The topic for the present is Easter. From all appearances there will be an abundance of stock, both in plants and cut flowers, to supply the demand.

Prices are easy in most lines. Such varieties as Meteors, Brides, Maids and Golden Gates are from $3 to $6; Perles and Woottons, $2 to $4; Beauties, select grades, are $3 to $4 per doz., and from that down to 50 cents per dozen for shorts.

Carnations are quite plentiful but in great demand; white and pink head the list and are much the best sellers. Fancy stock still brings $3, the bulk, though, is sold for $2 and a few at $1.50.

Violets also seem quite steady in demand but prices have not recovered; the best stock goes for $2.50 per 1,000 but the bulk of them go for $2. Bulbous stock remains about the same as reported in last issue; still very plentiful and very little demand for it. Smilax is somewhat scarce. Adiantum is in good demand but stock is poor.

Club Meeting.

The March meeting of the Florists' Club was held last Thursday afternoon and was fairly well attended. President Guy opened the meeting at 3 p. m. with 18 members present. This was our mixed cut flower meeting, but only a few made exhibitions. R. F. Tesson won first prize for a fine vase of Ethel Crocker carnations; F. J. Fillmore, second, for a vase of mixed roses; Dr. Halstedt, of Belleville, third, for a vase of well-grown mixed roses. Dr. Halstedt also showed a vase of sports of Mrs. Bradt. The American Rose Co. of Washington, D. C., showed a fine vase of their new rose Ivory which was received in good condition and was much admired. The rose was awarded the club's certificate of merit.

Rudolph Wind and Robert Scott made application for membership.

After some discussion it was decided to have a show this year and the president appointed the following committee to take charge: J. J. Beneke, Fred Meinhardt, C. C. Sanders, R. J. Mohr and George Windler. It was decided to discontinue having monthly flower shows for prizes. Mr. Robert F. Tesson read his essay on "The Cultivation of the Rose Today as Contrasted with Ten Years Ago," which was very instructive to the members and was received with thanks.

The committee on World's Fair was appointed as follows: Fred C. Weber, R. F. Tesson and J. J. Beneke. The committee is to see the World's Fair officials so as to get recognition during the fair.

Henry Berning and Carew Sanders postponed reading their essays until next meeting. This will make four essays for the April meeting, as follows: "Bulb Stock and How It Should Be Grown to Make It Profitable," by E. W. Guy; "How to Grow Profitable Pot Plants," by Carl Beyer; "Shrubs for the Florist," by Carew Sanders; "Best Method for Wholesaling Cut Flowers," by Henry Berning. The next meeting will be held Thursday afternoon, April 11, at 3 o'clock.

J. F. Ammann is a candidate for mayor of Edwardsville, Ill. Fred is a great hustler and will no doubt be elected, at least we hope so.

E. W. Guy, Dr. Halstedt and Henry Emundt of Belleville; William Winter and Fred Ude, Jr., of Kirkwood; J. F. Ammann of Edwardsville, and S. S. Skidelsky of Philadelphia, were visitors the past week.

gardener, is laying out the private place of Fred Kole at Venice, Ill. Mr. Kole is a wealthy banker of that place and is sparing no expense in putting the place in first-class shape, and he has the right man in Mr. Busche.

FUNERAL DESIGNS.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a group of designs used last October at the funeral of the manager of a large department store in Chicago, and it shows that the set design has most decidedly not yet passed away. In fact, some florists note something of a revival in the call for large set pieces at certain funerals.

Many of the designs seen in the group were arranged by the Geo. Wittbold Company, Chicago, and to them we are indebted for the photograph and the following facts regarding the designs:

The loving cup was four feet high, the outside all white roses and the inside yellow at the rim and solid pink below that, to represent wine in the cup. The handles were of carnations. The price paid for this was $50. The heart was made solidly of Bridesmaid roses and the price was $30.

The broken column was seven feet tall, the column being of Bride roses and the garland of violets. The broken piece of the column appeared on one side of the base, while the other was filled with sago palm leaves and a bunch of roses. The cost of this piece was $55. The open book was of carnations, with Perle roses at the edges, and the lettering and the pen were in violets. It was to represent some book kept by the deceased and indicated the last entry.

While Messrs. Wittbold are not prepared to say there is an especially noticeable increase in the call for set designs, as the great bulk of the funeral arrangements they make are simple bunches, yet they have had a large call at times and feel sure the design still has a strong hold on popular favor. One thing they have noticed is an enlarged use of decorative plants at funerals, all now requiring at least a few palms and many ordering sufficient for quite a decoration.

BUFFALO.

I forget whether March came in like a lamb or a lion, but it's acting now like a Texas steer, and wind and mud and snow and rotten ice and occasionally a little sunshine is served up to us regularly in the course of 24 hours. An early dry spring would have been a great help to the Pan-American. If, however, April the 1st finds frost entirely gone and the ground dry, all will be well.

There is not much of the dullness of Lent felt in this city and on fine days we find business quite fair. Flowers are quite plentiful, especially violets. A good many are sold but it does not keep down the cut.

Mr. C. F. Christenson has had for the past two months a grand bed of mignonette, a big lot of it and spikes two feet long. It has paid well, as most anything does when well grown. It is in six inches of soil on a broad middle bench of a very light house and a night temperature never over 45 degrees at night.

From present indications lilies are going to be rather scarce. There are blocks of a few hundred here and there but in many establishments there will not be one. So I look for a lively demand. In other popular Easter flowers there seems to be enough to go around, although we do confidently expect that the coming Easter will be a great one.

We have a good many visitors, rather more, naturally, than ordinary seasons, and most of them take advantage of their being in town and have a look at the Pan-Am. Mr. Van Zanten was here and a very jolly young man who represents Messrs. Hageman & Meyer, and young Mr. Ed. Fancourt spent a day on his road home to Philadelphia, for a few days' holiday, and doubtless there were several more that we had not the honor to meet.

On Thursday next the club holds its annual election and there is likely to be a lively contest for the several offices for they will be positions of honor, but by no means soft jobs, for the coming summer, as every man will have to do his duty and there will be an abundance of duty to do.

Mr. W. J. Palmer started last night for the grand aristocratic, gilt edged and doubtless magnificent New York rose show.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

The old caution to "Beware the Ides of March" seems to need as much attention on the part of Beantown florists as in the days of the laurel crowned Cæsar. Another broken week. Probably fairly satisfactory to the pink and white rose men who sold copiously of their wares even if at a low figure; fairly so to the pink carnation men as good flowers were a little scarce in their boxes and consequently brought fair prices. The double violet men wore a puzzled expression; the single violet men almost a pleased one because they did a little better than for a month or so. The bulb goods men also softened their haggard expression to a slight extent but the red rose men wore faces as long as the stems of their roses. Bushels of fine red roses poured into the city but for some unknown reason the retail call for them almost disappeared. The arrival of larger lots of Brunners also complicates the situation. Is it not remarkable that in the long run the Exeter Rose Conservatories of New Hampshire, can quite successfully compete with warmer states on red roses? While perhaps a bit behind them during a couple of the coldest months, yet during the remainder of the year it is nip and tuck, and their present output handled here by myself, is not surpassed in any respect. But they are the only New England growers who thus far have made anything like a permanent success of red roses of any kind except Jacks, their success with American Beauties being distinct.

"A Waverley Novel."

Unless you think you can adequately describe Jordan & Marsh's business in a one-story ink building do not criticise me for a sham structure about the establishment of E. N. Pierce & Sons of Waverley. But I went out there and since the electric free transfer system carried me about twenty miles very cutely for a nickel I think I may claim I was electro-"cuted" for that distance. They have 125,000 feet of glass, largely used just now for the development of 60,000 Easter lily potted plants estimated to carry 360,000 buds and blossoms. They claim it as the largest collection of the kind. Who dares dispute it?

Mr. Pierce and his two sons seem especially adapted for the work, each to his own department. Mr. Pierce is chief of the horticultural branch with fifteen assistants. One look at the products in the city and another at the magnificent crop now coming, proves his efficiency, but I find an hour's walk with him from house to house even more demonstrative as well as instructive. But his success with lilies lies as much in the completeness of his plant as anything. Twelve huge houses of them, each being run at a different temperature, and those fifteen men, and a team or two, busy continually changing the plants back and forth into different houses in order to hasten or retard the growth of each. Very simple, you see, when you have the twelve houses, the fifteen men and the teams, especially with the addition of the tracks laid in the houses and the narrow truck that runs along them and carries fifty pots with a push of one hand. Since this crop will be out and away soon there is a stray undercurrent of preparation for the next filling of the houses which will consist largely of spiraea and stocks for Memorial day, after which comes the huge chrysanthemum crop. A feature of the lilies is their splendid foliage, the whole length of the stem obtained by giving them plenty of room, for which purpose the pots are put further and further apart as they are being handled day by day, good pink plants and mignonette being ruthlessly thrown out to gain the extra space needed.

The son, Allen, is too well known in his capacity of city salesman to need more than passing notice. His customers have found that besides being a very pleasant man to deal with, his goods are always as represented and the price is right. And why not? It costs less to grow a good plant than a poor one.

But the work of the other son, Bert, is not so generally known. His mechanical and electrical achievements are almost marvelous, two or three of his ideas being patented. He knows every inch of the seven miles of piping on the place, because he put it in, bending the two and four-inch pipes in lots of places where others use elbows. The four big boilers are only toys to him. They formerly used all four, but the new eighty-five foot chimney makes one big fellow do it all, even in the coldest weather. His very latest, is the installment of an automatic pump that assists the return of water to the boiler immensely. By his own device if the night fireman neglects the temperature, a bell rings in his bedroom and by the same device he can call that functionary. By another device a call on their long distance telephone sounds a gong that can be heard half a mile. His stock of pipe fitters' tools is complete, his blacksmith shop and machine shop perfect, lathe and all, with a twenty-five horse power engine to run it, with other machines, including one for cleaning small pots as fast as two men can throw them at it.

There has been a little fear that the general lily crop for Boston would be a little too late for Easter but with the sure arrival of the crop of this establishment I think there will be no trouble.

PITTSBURG.

The Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club is a pretty lively institution, and it has bright, pithy, well-attended meetings. It does not have set papers or essays because it reasons that its members are too busy men to prepare written papers; further, many of its best growers and cultivators are so unaccustomed to essay writing that the preparation of a paper would be such a burden as to scare them away from the meetings rather than induce them to attend them. But all come primed to tell what they know if they are asked to, see what is on hand, and find out all about what their neighbors have seen, heard and are doing. And there is an exhibition of cut flowers or plants at every meeting, and these subjects on the table are the foundation of the evening discussion, for every plant or bunch of flowers is taken up and commented on.

At the last meeting, Thursday evening, 14th inst., were a large bunch of splendid specimens of the White Golden Gate rose sent by the American Rose Co., Washington, D. C., and a bunch of the same variety that had been cut for a month before being shipped. Its fine fragrance was noted by all and its thick, substantial petals evidenced its excellent keeping qualities. It is an ivory-white form of the Golden Gate rose. David Fraser, gardener to Mr. H. C. Frick, finds that Golden Gate is the best growing rose he has, and his people like it better than any other variety. Now he will also grow the white one. Some very fine Brides and Bridesmaids were contributed by Mr. Fischer, a local grower. They were from three years' planted stock on benches. The top soil is removed each year and replaced with fresh earth. While this plan works admirably with Mr. Fischer, others preferred annual planting.

John N. May, Summit, N. J., sent a superb lot of Olympia carnations and of a beautiful bright pink seedling, No. 22, which has a pronounced clove fragrance. The Olympias were much admired and the president told that he had seen them growing at Summit ten days before that, in a triple span house, and what a grand sight they were for vigor, thrift, evenness and productiveness. But Mr. Randolph and others of the large decorators said that only a limited number of striped carnations could be used in Pittsburg, the people preferred self colors. Mr. Fischer showed a fine lot of the Lawson and praised its behavior warmly. It was thrifty, prolific and a good keeper and capital seller. But Mr. Clark remarked that in decorations its color required a full decoration of the same tint; in this respect it was unlike the Marquis, which could be used with most anything. In Pittsburg, however, so far, it has been impossible to get enough of either of these varieties from the local growers to supply the demand. Some other growers showed bunches of fine flowers. Several of the florists paid Fred Burki the compliment that his house of White Cloud was unsurpassed anywhere, east or west. Both Mr. Burki and Mr. Blind gave their impressions of the carnation meeting at Baltimore and the good things they saw there and about New York.

Talking of Harrisii lilies, James Murdoch said that he didn't have 10 per cent of diseased bulbs this year (Mr. M. has been in the Bermudas and had an eye to selecting for himself), but John Bader declared that he (John) didn't have 10 per cent of good ones. More than that, John urged, he had disease in the Bermuda longiflorums, and the Japan longiflorums showed such a mixture of types as to indicate that they had been grown from seed. Mr. Murdoch said that under favorable conditions Bermuda Harrisiis will bloom the first year from seed. Mr. Reineman declared there was a big fortune in it for the man who would go beyond the frost line and grow Harrisii lilies from seed or any way else he pleased if he could get them absolutely free from disease. "Yes, you bet there is," exclaimed John Bader, "and I'd pay him big money for his bulbs and glad to get them." Neil McCallum, of Wilmerding, but formerly of Australia, said that where he was at the antipodes they didn't have the lily disease, and asked if the bulbs couldn't be grown there for the American market, because of the reverse of seasons, or may be a thoroughly clean stock might be obtained from there for cultivation and propagation in the northern hemisphere.

The president called attention to the disease of Narcissus Horsfieldii in Holland and the sad havoc it was playing among the bulbs of that variety. Mr. Price told that one of the nicest things he had this winter was a lot of Florentine irises. He grew them in pots all last summer, ripened them early and gave them a good rest. They had three to four big flowers to a stem, but the color of the blossoms was a little bluer than on flowers out of doors. Mr. Fraser spoke of having a fine lot of Iris Susianus in bloom in pots.

Eleven new members were proposed for election. P. A.

Cut flower trade since Lent came in has been rather quiet, except for funeral work, of which there is a good deal to do. The death of Hon. C. L. Magee made a demand for all white flowers to be had; very many extra large pieces were made, some being very handsome ones.

Blind & Hoffmeyer are cutting the best roses now; Burki the best carnations.

The Jones underfeed stoker which Burki had installed under one of his boilers this winter seems to do its work. Burki says he is pleased with it now.

Lord & Burnham Co. are getting out material for two iron houses, 28x400 each for the Pittsburg Rose Co., at Bakerstown station, of which Burki is at the head. They are to be planted with roses as soon as finished. Baer.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Trade conditions are much the same as last week. Business is good on the average but demand is spasmodic and a good day is apt to be succeeded by a poor one. There is a trifle firmer tone on carnations, especially whites. The range is still $1.50 to $3, with $4 for fancy. Roses still range from $4 to $7, with the majority at $5 to $6. Violets and bulbous stuff are still dragging and as a rule have to be cleaned up at low figures. All are looking forward to a big Easter business.

The guessing as to the supply of lilies for Easter is still going on. It is evident now that there will be a shortage but no two are agreed as to how great a one.

Club Meeting.

At the last meeting of the Florists' Club, Mr. Benjamin Durfee, of the American Rose Co., Washington, D. C., displayed two large vases of fine blooms of his new rose, White Golden Gate. They were much admired and were examined with great interest by many rose growers present. A committee consisting of Messrs. E. Buettner, Geo. Collins and J. S. Wilson, was appointed to examine the blooms and report and they did so, recommending that the club's certificate of merit be awarded, which was done. They reported the rose as practically identical with Golden Gate except as to color.

Mr. Durfee favored the club with some remarks on roses, which will be found elsewhere in this issue. The paper by Mr. H. N. Bruns, with discussion by Mr. Aug. Jurgens and others, will also be found in another column of this issue.

The program of the next meeting, to be held April 5, includes two papers on "Hardy Herbaceous Flowers Suitable for the Cut Flower Market," one by G. Swenson and another by C. E. Hawkes.

Various Items.

The three Poehlmann brothers are together again. Adolph has closed his store at 55 Wabash avenue, and his stock is now being handled by his brothers, pending the completion of the organization of the Poehlmann Bros. Co., which is being incorporated with a paid up capital stock of $90,000. The new company will control both the big places at Morton Grove and will have over 200,000 square feet of glass to draw supplies from.

Wietor Bros. are cutting some fine Triumph carnations and have a big crop coming on. It has a fine, strong stem with them. They have had no trouble from stem rot.

Mr. C. M. Dickinson returned from the east Wednesday and Mr. C. L. Washburn is expected back from North Carolina next week.

George Piepgras has filed a petition in bankruptcy and his business is now in the hands of the courts.

Bassett & Washburn will soon build at Hinsdale a range of new houses containing 40,000 square feet of glass.

Last Tuesday the Grand Rapids train due here at 7 a. m. did not reach the city till 2 p. m. and as a result a lot of Michigan flowers reached the market very late that day.

Heim Bros. will this season add 25,000 square feet of glass to their range at Blue Island.

It is evident that the building of new greenhouses has not yet been checked by the prevailing high prices of glass. During the last ten days the John C. Moninger Co., this city, has received orders for cypress material for new houses that will require a total of 224,200 square feet of glass to cover them, and this is in addition to many other large orders.

MADISON, N. J.

Wednesday, March 13, was carnation night with the Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Club and some magnificent flowers were staged. C. W. Ward, Cottage Gardens, Queens, had on exhibition a large collection including Roosevelt, Harry Fenn, Morning Glory, Joseph Manley, a fine scarlet, Golden Beauty, Marquis, Viola Allen and Novelty. These flowers traveled in fine condition and the entire collection was deservedly awarded a certificate of merit.

J. L. Dillon sent a fine lot of Queen Louise. This variety also arrived in excellent condition and was much admired. Peter Fisher sent a large vase of his matchless Lawson. It is needless to praise this exhibit for everybody knows the quality of Fisher's Lawsons. John N. May exhibited Olympia in good shape and seedlings No. 2972 and 2209. One of these seedlings, but I forgot which, is a lovely shade of true pink, the other a very large white.

Of the local lights W. Duckham staged vases of Glacier, White Cloud, Bradt and mixed varieties, all of which were excellent. A. Herrington exhibited Lawson, Olympia, Crane and Marquis, all very fine, Lawson particularly so. D. Shannon had a vase of immense Bridesmaid roses with three foot stems, and W. Charlton a mixed vase of roses, Brides and Maids.

John N. May was the essayist for the evening. He gave an informal talk on carnations as seen at Baltimore and elsewhere and reiterated the statement that it didn't pay to grow any but the very finest flowers, mentioning where he had seen Scott's sold for $5 a thousand during the past week. In his opinion mulching the beds at this season was the cause of the flowers splitting their calyxes. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer for his address and also the gentlemen who had been good enough to send their flowers for the club's inspection, notably Messrs. Ward, Dillon, Fisher and May. C.

HARTFORD, CONN.

The annual meeting of the Florists' Club was held March 12 and officers for the ensuing year were chosen as follows: T. J. McRonald, president; W. W. Hunt, vice president; J. F. Coombs, secretary; Theodore Wirth, treasurer. The board of trustees elected include the above named officers, also George Osborn, John Coombs, and J. F. Huss.

After the business meeting there was consideration of the subject of carnations and other flowers. George S. Osborn showed several varieties of carnations, which included Marquis, Bradt, Lawson and Red Bradt. Some of the blossoms measured from three to three and one-fourth inches. Mr. Osborn gave an interesting talk as to the best growers, the best sellers and the most profitable to grow. Mr. Huss talked on orchids and other flowers.

At the close of the meeting a vote of thanks was extended to the entertainment committee, also to Messrs. Huss and Osborn. There is some talk among the members of forming a bowling team.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

The second annual exhibition of the American Rose Society was held in New York, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, of this week. A full report, together with views of the display, will appear in our special spring number, to be issued next week.

Flower Holder.—Simon Weiler, of New York city, has patented a flower holder that can be attached to any part of the dress to hold a bunch of flowers in any desired position. The holder comprises a bar having a fastening device by which it is secured to the dress. A pin on the bar extends approximately parallel to and in the direction of the length of the bar to receive the stems of a bunch of flowers. Ribbons on the bar can be passed in front of the stems and tied in a bow.

Oakland, Md.—H. Weber & Sons contemplate adding 10,000 feet of new glass next summer.

Dixon, Ill.—The greenhouse of Christian Wuhl was destroyed by fire March 5.

Don't miss having an adv. in our special spring number to be issued next week, if you have anything to sell to the trade.

New Haven, Conn. The copartnership known as the Elm City Nursery Co., Messrs. C. P. Lines and Ernest F. Coe, proprietors, has been incorporated and will be known in the future as The Elm City Nursery Co., capital $15,000, paid in. President and treasurer, Ernest F. Coe; secretary and manager, H. E. Turner. The new company is the outgrowth of the business started some forty years ago by Mr. C. P. Lines, the veteran nurseryman. He devoted himself for a number of years to the propagation of grape vines, later adding other hardy trees and shrubs until a general line of nursery stock could be had at his salesground on Beers street.

About ten years ago Mr. Ernest F. Coe was admitted to the business which was known as Messrs. C. P. Lines & Co., and later Elm City Nursery Co. By strict attention to business their trade grew so rapidly that in 1896 it was thought advisable to purchase a tract of land on Edgewood avenue, Westville. As is now generally known they have gathered here one of the most extensive stocks of fruit and ornamental trees, shrubs, evergreens, roses, etc., to be found in New England. The secretary of the newly incorporated company, H. E. Turner, has been with the old firm a number of years.

Albert Lea, Minn.—P. Clausen & Son have purchased material for two new houses to be erected this spring. One, 20x125, is for carnations, and the other, 14x45, is for palms. They have also purchased a 50 H. P. boiler that will be installed when the new houses are finished. They will then have a total of 11,500 square feet of glass.

Lowell, Mass.—Otto H. Bourdy has leased the greenhouses formerly conducted by Paul R. Burtt and Mr. Burtt has bought a larger place nearer the center of the city.

Lewiston, Ill.—The boiler at the greenhouses of William Jones broke down last week and before repairs could be made serious damage to his stock had been done.

Holyoke, Mass.—Edward H. Howland, the florist, was married March 13, the bride being Miss Nellie M. Wilder of Conway. The happy pair are now on their wedding trip, during which they will visit New York and Washington.

Minneapolis, Minn.—William Donaldson & Co. have decided to erect a range of glass containing 30,000 square feet at an early date.

Forest City, Ia.—Albert Stitz, of Arlington Heights, Ill., will soon build greenhouses here containing 5,000 square feet of glass.

Cleveland, O.—A. Schmitt of Glenville will this spring add 3,500 feet of new glass.

St. Louis, Mo.—J. C. Brohan will soon put up 2,400 square feet of glass.

Class 17—Group of 6 distinct varieties; 25 sprays each, in three colors; red or scarlet, deep pink, and orange.
Class 18—Group of 6 distinct varieties; 25 sprays of each, in three colors; yellow or primrose, blue or maroon, and striped or variegated.
Class 19—Bouquet not to exceed 200 sprays; quality of flowers, harmony of colors, and taste in arrangement to govern.
Class 20—General display; 25 sprays of each variety.

Entries must be received by superintendent not later than Saturday, July 20th.

Exhibits must be in place not later than noon of the opening day.

Any exhibit in one class will not be considered as competing for award in other classes.

The lowest award will be a diploma; the next a bronze medal; the next a silver medal, and the highest a gold medal.

Within a few days we will have in pamphlet form a schedule of all the flower exhibits to be held during the summer, which will be sent widely to the several specialists of the country and will be gladly supplied on application.

This list is subject to slight changes.

Huntsville, Ala.—W. F. Heikes, manager of the Huntsville Wholesale Nurseries, will be in St. Louis during March and April to distribute stock shipped to cold storage there. Mr. Heikes was the first to make use of cold storage for nursery stock, and this is his 21st year in shipping to St Louis for distribution.

Haverhill, Mass.—C. H. Kaulback is building two new houses and will put in new boilers. Frank Poore has sold his retail store to Chas. McLaughlin. His greenhouses have not been in service this winter, and it has not been decided what disposition will be made of them. Lace Bros. are planning to build two houses soon.

Cleveland, O.—The Home Gardening Association is preparing to make its annual distribution of seeds among school children. The commoner flower seeds are given the children at the rate of one cent a packet. Last season nearly 50,000 packets were distributed.

Los Angeles, Cal.—C. B. Kelly, the nurseryman, was badly burned Feb. 14 as the result of the explosion of a lamp. He was taken to the hospital, and while his burns are not considered dangerous he will be unable to attend to business for some time.

THE NEW CANNA Golden Age

THIS CANNA originated on my grounds in Ocean City from seed dropped from the Florence Vaughan. The bloom is a rich golden yellow, free from spots or stripes, has five broad, full petals, which gives it the shape of a lily, is fully as large as the Italia, grows about four feet high and is a vigorous grower. The foliage is a bright green. It is a canna of the orchid type, but stands the wind and hot sun fully as well as a Crozy. For hardiness and beauty it cannot be excelled by any canna in cultivation. The first root was sold to P. S. McDonald of Philadelphia, for $2.00 his own offer, while he stood looking at them in bloom last summer. We have but a few hundred roots, and anyone who desires to get into the stock of this lovely canna had better not wait. It is the only yellow canna in existence without spots.

Strong roots that will grow (two eyes), 50c each; $5.00 per doz. Expressage prepaid.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Various Items.

During the last week trade and prices have dropped considerably although it is still fair. I suppose it is owing to the Lenten season. Stock is good and in fair quantity. The brethren are putting in their best licks to make a good Easter and from present appearances are likely to succeed.

The Kalamazoo Nursery & Floral Company held their first annual meeting recently, and report a prosperous year, with a bright outlook for the future. This concern, which started in last summer with some four thousand feet of glass, is under the management of Mr. W. C. Cook, formerly with the Dunkley Floral Company and more recently manager of the Chicago Floral Company of this city, now defunct.

Friend George Taylor is still doing business at the old stand on Portage street. He had the misfortune to lose his horse lately.

Mr. Sam Batson is still cutting quantities of very fine carnations which he is shipping to Cincinnati.

G. Van Bochove & Bro. are cutting some very fine roses, carnations and lilies. This enterprising firm have during the last two years doubled their growing capacity and the increasing demand for their stock compels them to enlarge again this year.

The Dunkley Floral Company are also cutting some nice stock. This establishment which after the demise of the late Mr. Joseph Dunkley, was allowed to run down considerably is, under the present able management, gradually assuming its old time form.

Weather has been squally and dark; have not seen the sun for a week.

RIBES.

SPRING.

Says the Crocus to the Snowdrop,
How is the weather now?
Can I come up in the sunshine
And warm my frozen brow?
What says the weather man
About the storms to come?
It isn't pleasant down here now,
In fact, I feel quite glum.
Stay in your bed, the Snowdrop said,
And sleep in sweet repose.
For if you try to come up now
You'll surely freeze your nose.
The weather man predicts it warm,
With sunshine and all that,
But you must bear in mind that he Is talking through his hat.
So the Crocus staid in bed until
The Snowdrop rang its bell,
To call the sleeping Crocus up
And tell it all is well.
The Crocus stood on guard until
The warming sun stood high,
Then called the blue-eyed Scilla up
To mock the azure sky. —S. C. C.

A very interesting and instructive series of leaflets printed for free distribution upon request with orders for seeds has been issued by W. Atlee Burpee & Co., the Philadelphia seedsmen. Their titles are: "How to grow dahlias," "Remedies for insect pests." "How to grow tomatoes," "Salads and garnishes; their use and cultivation," and a collection of versified criticisms and comments upon the much-talked-of poem, "The man with the hoe," in addition to the original poem.

HEADQUARTERS FOR EASTER PLANTS.

I have an immense stock of the finest and choicest in the market, and in such quantities that exceed anything that I ever had and offered before. You would be astonished if you could take a look in seven (7) large greenhouses and an equal number of hotbeds which are filled to the fullest extent, and devoted to the entire cultivation of Easter plants alone. Therefore I will be prepared to fill all orders, if sent in time, as far as the supply will reach.

Azalea Indica. I am one of the largest importers of these choice Easter plants and have about a thousand more than last year. I raised these in large houses, 20x115 feet, erected for the cultivation solely of these plants. These azaleas were selected by myself last fall on my second trip to Belgium and as I am agent for a large concern there it gives you a chance to purchase your goods at first hand and not through a middleman. I have only new stock, none left over from a year ago. I can offer you plants in bloom, or buds, blooming Easter week, 6-in. pots, 60c, 75c and some for $1.00. Most of them Mme. Vander Cruyssen, and some other of the best varieties which will be selected by myself. I have some fine specimen plants, 10-11-in. pots, 20-22 inches across, very large (Mme. Vander Cruyssen), of good shape and full of buds, $3.00 each, easily worth $5.00. Weight, with pots, 37 lbs.; weight without pots, 17 lbs.

Araucaria excelsa and glauca in excellent shape, 3 tiers, 5-in. pots, 60c, 75c and $1.00 each. Very fine specimens, $1.50 and $2.00 each, worth $3.00.

Spiraeas compacta and floribunda. Fine bushy plants, my own importation; perfect jewels; 5½-6-in. pots, $3.00 per doz; Specimen plants, $4.00 per doz.

Hyydrangea (Pink). 5½-6-in. pots, $3.00 to $4.00 per doz.

Cineraria hybrida. Choice colors, 6-in. pots, $2.50, $3.00 and $4.00 per doz. In bloom now or at Easter. I have a house full of them.

Begonias. President Carnot and Semperflorens giganteum, also some other varieties, 6-in. pots, $3.00 to $4.00 per doz. Vernon and other good blooming varieties, 4-in. pots, $1.20 per doz.

Daisies (white) Marguerite. Fine bushy plants, 5-in. pots, $2.00 per doz.; 4-in., $1.00 per doz.

Liliums Longiflorum and Harrisii. Fine plants, raised from bulbs 7x9, obtained of the well known firm of Henry F. Michell, 6-in. pots (from 5 to 10 buds to a plant), at the rate of 10c per bud. Height, 1½ to 2½ feet. No lilies sold by themselves; other plants must accompany them.

Cyperus (Umbrella plants), 4-in. pots, $1.00 per doz.

Corypha australis (Palms), fine plants, 14-18 in. high, 5-5½-in. pots. 50c each.

Dracaena indivisa (imported), for decoration; 6-in. pots, 50c each.

Hyacinths (Dutch named), strictly my own importation, raised from bulbs that cost from $6.00 to $8.25 per 100. These fine hyacinths I am selling at the rate of $10.00 per 100; extra choice, $12.00.

Tournesol Tulips (double red and yellow striped), 3 in a 4-in. pot. They are simply beautiful and sell at sight. $1.50 per doz. pots.

Daffodils (Von Sion), 3 in a 5-in. pot, from $1.50 to $1.75 per doz. pots.

Geraniums, 3-in. pots, Mme. Thibaut, Pilot, and some other good varieties, $5.00 per 100.

Cash with order, please. Money can be sent safe by express, postal money order, registered letter or drafts on Philadelphia or New York banks. At such a busy time (packing and shipping) I have no time to inquire into recommendation letters. All goods shipped at purchaser's risk.

HYDRANGEAS.

A superb new hydrangea. Hydrangea Hortensis Mariesii. This is a grand, unique new variety, sent out by James Veitch & Sons, London, England, last winter, 1899-1900. It is named after their collector, Mr. Maries, who introduced it, and described by them "as having remarkably very large sterile flowers, three inches in diameter; color a light pink, shaded mauve, and the finest of Hydrangea Hortensia. This variety is most remarkable and distinct in pots." It is sure to be a success. We offer strong plants, 4½-in. pots, 75c each; $7.50 a doz. Also Deutzia Corymbiflora, a very distinct variety; Deutzia gracilis rosea and Deutzia gracilis venusta, the Azalea Deutzia. Send for circular for price of these and other varieties. Cash with order, please. John Charlton & Sons, Rochester, N. Y.

Burpee's Earliest of All is the Sweet Pea for florists. Notwithstanding their dwarf habit and neat slender foliage, the plants are of vigorous growth and come into bloom always ten days to two weeks in advance of the Extra Early Blanche Ferry, which has been heretofore a week ahead of all other varieties. The flowers are as large as those of the regular strains of Blanche Ferry, and have long stout stems, making them entirely satisfactory for cutting; they are borne in clusters usually of three, all facing one way. The standards are a bright, rich pink, while the wings are nearly pure white. Burpee's "Earliest of All" is not only the earliest to bloom in open ground, but is also the most desirable for forcing under glass for winter cut-flowers. The dwarf habit of this variety renders it much more easily grown on the benches, and for winter planting, and from seed sown during the latter part of August blooms may be cut during the holidays, while with the later varieties the blooms could be had before February or March. Per pkt. 5 cts.; oz. 6 cts.; ¼ lb. 20 cts.; per lb. 60cts.; 5 lbs. or more at 45 cts. per lb.

1880 HAMMOND'S SLUG SHOT. 1901

Destroys Pests which prey upon Vegetation in the GREENHOUSE, CONSERVATORY or GARDEN.

SLUG SHOT is a composite powder not dependent solely upon any one of its parts for effectiveness. For 21 years SLUG SHOT has been used, doing effective work against Leaf Eaters, Juice Suckers, Sow Bugs, Snails or Grubs in the soil. SLUG SHOT is spread by duster or blower. Water will carry it through a sprayer or pump. It destroys in this way elm tree beetles, caterpillars on trees. Where Snails or Sow Bugs are troublesome, dust SLUG SHOT on the soil with a duster. SLUG SHOT rids fowls, calves and dogs of lice and fleas. SLUG SHOT is put up in tin perforated screw-top canisters and cartons holding one lb. The 5-lb. package (see cut) retails at 25 or 30c each, larger packages at less rate. SLUG SHOT is Sold by the Seedsmen in all parts of the United States and Canada.

GRAPE DUST for mildews and blights. SOLUTION OF COPPER against fungus of all sorts.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

With us, spring is here; the robin awakes us in the morning, the croak of the frog greets our ear and the crocus will soon greet our eye. There was little frost penetrated the ground this winter as a continual covering of snow kept it out, so after all it is likely to be an early spring everywhere except on the banks of the Niagara, for we have to go through a six weeks' refrigerating period while the ice of the inland seas passes down the lakes and finally tumbles over the mighty cataract. But this is not altogether a disadvantage as it somewhat retards vegetation and gives more time for our outside gardening and this leads on to what I have in mind.

Pruning Hardy Shrubs.

Perhaps you have not had time or opportunity to prune your hardy roses and shrubs either of your own or your customers. It was a wise man who said the best time to prune a tree was when your knife was sharp, but neglect to prune roses and shrubs during winter or spring would result in very unsatisfactory condition of the plants. Remember the broad distinction between those shrubs that flower at the end of a growth and those that have already formed their flower buds and only need the warm days of spring to expand them. Nearly all our common fruit trees belong to the latter. Among flowering shrubs the lilac, cydonia (Japan quince) and forsythia are well known examples that have already set their flower buds and if you prune them hard you will simply get no flower, only growth.

The hardy roses, Hydrangea paniculata and althea are familiar shrubs that should and must be pruned back to two or three eyes of last year's growth; so long as you leave three good plump eyes the stronger will be the growth and larger the flowers. Many of our shrubs are allowed to grow into gawky, naked objects because they have not been kept down. You may say: "What about those shrubs that you don't prune, the early bloomers?" Prune those as soon as the flower is entirely gone, then they will make a growth and set their flower buds for another year. No better time to prune where it is needed than now.

Herbaceous Plants.

If you did not do all your transplanting in October or November now is a good time, just as soon as the ground is dry; many of them will hardly know they have been moved, but the principal object of moving is to divide, which is quite necessary with many. The center dies out, the soil becomes exhausted and they become straggling, and a move every five or six years is of the greatest benefit, but different genera differ very much in this respect; while a paeony will make a fine clump for years, the helianthus will spread out over all creation.

Bay Trees—Hydrangeas.

Florists who have not had an European experience do not realize how hardy a tree is the sweet bay (Laurus nobilis). We don't all have sheds adapted for their care during winter and have to keep them in our coolest house taking up much valuable room. If they have been kept warm they may feel 10 degrees of frost but if kept cool and they have not started into growth they should go outside at once. If we do get some sharp frosts they are easily laid on their sides and some cloths or mats thrown over them for the night.

The same can be said about the large tubs of dormant Hydrangea Otaksa which are going to be very fashionable. Our customers see them in all their glory at the sea-side resorts and they want them for their home grounds. Hydrangeas that are the slightest bit advanced by the heat of a greenhouse are useless for this purpose for they soon become shabby. They must have been in a basement or root-house or sunken pit and the sooner they get the open air and full light the better so that they can come along slowly as our hardy shrubs do. They don't want any frost but are easily protected if we do get a cold snap and are much better out of doors than in any winter quarters.

Easter.

Every thought and energy will be given for the next few days to getting things in shape for Easter. Little can be added to what has been already said about either forcing or retarding. You will know now without any doubt just how your crops are. There is nothing like being well organized to do the business and do it rightly and satisfactorily to your customers. The least excusable of all omissions is to have dirty pots. You know pretty nearly what is going to sell and it is little labor wasted if you do have a few hundred pots washed that were not actually necessary. If you buy your plants, insist on the grower delivering them all with well cleaned pots.

I cannot recommend any better system than that we have adopted for several years past, viz., to set aside in your most convenient house a space in which each day's deliveries shall be placed and labeled as soon as sold. The man who has head enough to ship out the stuff on the wagons as soon as there is one waiting is a very valuable man but every help should be given him, and if he has a thousand plants to be sent out on Friday, two and three or a dozen to one party it is a great help, in fact a necessity, that they should be all together and not at all mixed up with Saturday's or Sunday's delivery.

We all have to call in help on these busy days that are very inexperienced in delivering and it is a poor plan to trust to their intelligence and thought, so lay things out so that they can't go wrong. We write the name and address on one plant and also on that label the articles going to this address, if more than one, and then on the other plants just the name and address. It is no use saying to the driver, "Here is a lily, an azalea and a rose for Mrs. Mark Hanna." He will say "all right, sir," but with a wagon load it's impossible for him to remember, and the name only makes sure. We know how horrible it is about 7 p. m. Saturday to have Mrs. Rockefeller call you up on the phone and tell you she has the azalea she ordered all right, but the rhododendron did not come and that she had received a pan of hyacinths which she did not order. You could send another rhododendron but what poor woman is minus the pan of hyacinths you are not sure, and have no means of finding out unless there is a name and address on every parcel.

We did not find much occasion to dress up plants with ribbon last year, perhaps it is more in fashion in other cities, but we do find that almost every one wants the pots covered with some crepe or fancy paper. This you must do cheerfully for it adds immensely to the appearance of the gift and 90 per cent, of all the plants purchased are sent as remembrances, and how happy we ought to be that plants and flowers have taken the place of the elaborate Easter cards of a few years ago. Let nothing be undone in the way of tying or preparing plants for sale that can possibly be done before the last few days.

There is scarcely any plant so difficult to deliver as an Easter lily; all others that I can think of can be wrapped in paper without the slightest harm, but a lily bruises with the most careful wrapping and if two or three can swing against each other they are ruined, so if they have to go with other plants keep them far enough apart that they can jar against nothing. We have in delivering a wagon load of lilies less difficulty, for then we take ten or a dozen and carefully tie the heads together so that if they swing they all go as one and no harm is done. Let us hope that we have a still day; it is the wind that hurts; a windy day and the thermometer at 50 is worse than 35 if perfectly still.

Cut Flowers.

I leave to others to tell you about the cut flower department but I can tell you that we often all of us make a mistake in saving our flowers for the last grand day when we expect to get rid of them all in a few hours. Easter prices should prevail next Monday and from their on no customer should be refused. What matters when you sell if you get a good fair price for them? I am not going to dilate on the old story of the grower salting his flowers although they are as guilty of it as ever, with of course plenty of exceptions. Send in your stuff early so that the commission man can distribute it to his patrons. William Scott.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

Second Annual Meeting and Exhibition.

The second annual meeting of the above society was held in the Colonial room at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, on Wednesday afternoon, March 20. President Benjamin Dorrance presided. The attendance was not large, not nearly what it ought to be, but it was intelligent, representative, and, most of all, enthusiastic. Probably owing to the presence of many of New York's most influential and beautiful women, the orators of the profession were at their best. There was a most amusingly interesting display of flowers of speech over the location of the annual show. Of course differences of opinion and pride of home have always, will always, exist; they are vital reservoirs of human nature; they have supplied and feed the power and magnificence of our country, and the broadness and usefulness of its institutions.

President Dorrance in his opening remarks very happily reviewed the good work done by the rose society, and his hopes for the future did much to encourage his hearers. The report of the treasurer, John N. May, showed a balance of $2,500 in the funds of the society. The secretary, L. Barron, reported a membership of 205 in good standing, a gain of 36 during the past year; there were thirty-nine life members. The president informed us that one thousand dollars would accrue from membership dues by having this show at the Waldorf-Astoria.

The secretary reported on the particulars of the previous shows, and the results of the last June show rendered it inadvisable to hold one this summer under like circumstances. It was intended to publish and disseminate some useful treatises on the diseases of the rose, and matters pertaining to commercial fertilizers, in the next bulletin to be issued to members of the society. It was hoped the society's medals would be offered at the several rose shows to be held throughout the country. The new H. P. rose, William McKinley, had been registered with the society—and he suggested that some action be taken to cooperate with the S. A. F. O. H. in the matter of registration; he also suggested a change of date for the installation of officers.

A rising vote of thanks was given to the ladies' committee for their work in connection with this year's exhibition. It was decided to abolish associate membership, the only forms now being life membership, $50, and active membership, annual dues $3. Provision was made for a sinking fund, the interest of which is to be used to defray the expenses of the society. This reserve fund is to be vested in a board of five trustees to be elected at each annual meeting. The following were elected to serve for the ensuing year: B. F. Dorrance, John N. May, Henry Clews, Carl Stoeckel and John H. Taylor.

After considerable discussion, on motion of Mr. Taylor it was resolved that the secretary refer all registration of new roses to the S. A. F. O. H. Mr. Taylor gave notice of an amendment to the by-laws changing the date of installation of officers from January to July 1, such motion to be acted on at a special meeting to be held in connection with the society's next summer show. On motion of H. A. Siebrecht the society decided to hold its next exhibition in June at Newport, R. I., if possible in conjunction with that of the Newport Horticultural Society. Mrs. Burke-Roche, one of New York's leading society ladies, tendered the use of her pretty summer home garden and grounds there for the use of the society, and she with Mrs. Richard Irvin and Mrs. W. Storrs Wells were appointed a committee to make the necessary arrangements. (Although June is too early for the Newport season, still the decision to have the rose show there next summer is one of the wisest moves the society ever made and a grand exhibition is assured together with the knitting together of a powerful patronage.)

The meeting assumed its liveliest when the time came to discuss the place for the next March show, and the leaders of the debate distinguished themselves. E. M. Wood started the fun by inviting the society to hold its exhibition next March in the city of Boston. He guaranteed all expenses and assured them of an exhibition equal to if not better than any seen in the United States. Boston was the second largest community in the United States, he said (here there were queries about Chicago, and for a time we were sorry Winterson, Kreitling, Rudd, Asmus and the rest of the Western Indians were not present); taking a fifty-mile radius it had 2,800,000 people; its earning capacity is 70 cents per capita whilst that of all the rest of the communities was only 40 cents; they consequently had 85 per cent more of the wherewith to pay for luxuries than any other city in America. Talk about Boston! They could make as good a rose show in Boston as they could in New York; they had finer roses at the exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society that week than those they had here. Talk about New York! It was in it to a certain extent, that was all. Mr. Wood caused considerable amusement during his witty and bubbly speech, the ladies especially enjoying his comparisons. He ended by warning the society not to be narrow, not to be local. Philadelphia and Chicago, that great, growing giant city of the West, should get a chance to show what they could do, but he urged them to have the show in Boston next spring.

John H. Taylor said the society was still in its infancy and practically that was the first show of any magnitude it had held. The officers and the executive committee knew what it was to get certain influences working that they may be enabled to carry out what was desired, and now, when they had only succeeded in creating an interest in influential circles, he thought it would be a mistake to take the exhibition elsewhere, at least until they could walk instead of crawl; he moved that the next March show be held in New York City.

Robert Craig seconded the motion, and in support of it said he was convinced after due consideration that New York was the best place for the next spring show. By taking it elsewhere they would but undo what had been accomplished in the past years. He thought that New York had done nobly and was of the opinion that New York was the place for a permanent annual exhibition of the society. He cited the case of the National Rose Society of England holding their show every year in London. (The English society has held shows in cities besides London.) New York was to America what London was to England. He was sure the best interests of the society required the show to be given in New York at least next year. H. Siebrecht thought exhibitions could be held under the auspices of the society in other cities, but that New York was the place to hold the principal show. E. G. Hill said the society should not confine itself to one city, that the exhibitions should be moved from one city to another in order to increase the membership and extend the usefulness of the society. He was of the opinion they could put up a pretty good show in the west. He referred to the extensive establishments in Chicago and in the state of Indiana (whereupon some one remarked that the state of Indiana was in Chicago). He disagreed with Mr. Craig as to the wisdom of making New York the permanent place for the holding of the show and that previous to his coming there he thought it would be wise to try another city. Now, however, from what he had seen and learned he was convinced that the show should be held in New York next March, and he heartily supported that plan. Upon a vote being taken it was decided to hold the next March show in New York.

Benjamin Durfee brought up the matter of judging by the present scale of points. He thought everything should be done to further the interests of the rose growers, to enable them to keep ahead of the carnationists. The present scale was defective; he thought local committees ought to be created which could judge roses under conditions other than at exhibitions, and a scale of points be adopted covering the most important qualities, viewed both from the grower's and retailer's requirements; it might be practicable to have an independent scale covering freedom of bloom, keeping and shipping qualities, etc.

Mr. May thought the society was steering a little too close on the point system. He illustrated the danger by referring to a particular case at that exhibition where he considered a great injustice had been done an exhibitor. Paul M. Pierson was of the opinion that Mr. Durfee's proposition was impracticable as methods of treatment and surroundings had much to do with results, and rendered it almost impossible for any set of judges to form correct conclusions. On suggestion of the president the matter of revision of scale of points was left to the executive committee.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, F. R. Newbold, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; vice-presidents, Mrs. Richard Irvin, New York, and Carl Stoeckel, Norfolk, Conn.; secretary, Leonard Barron, New York; treasurer, John N. May, Summit, N. J. Messrs. E. M. Wood and Robert Craig were re-elected members of the executive committee. Mr. Newbold, the president-elect, is a most enthusiastic amateur horticulturist and is well known and admired by members of the trade. The interest he has taken for many years in the Dutchess County Horticultural Society has rendered it possible for that society to hold an annual exhibition in Poughkeepsie. His election to the presidency of the American Rose Society may not suit every greenhouse worker but the society has done a wise thing and we are sure will not have cause to regret it. We hope they will not dismiss the man who has worked so hard for the past two years without some show of appreciation but that of a formal vote of thanks.

What's the matter with having an annual dinner in connection with the show? Many were of the opinion that one should be given. It is true, too imposingly true, that there are too many societies, especially in New York, anyhow. Of course every society is doing good work but when one comes to figure up the cost of belonging to all it becomes almost startling. Pity it seems that most of them could not be welded together; economy and greater usefulness demand it. However, there is no good reason why every one owning a business which depends more or less on the rose should not join this most useful society. The dues could be made much less and instead of it having a membership of 200 it should have several thousand. The society certainly deserves the support of growers, nurserymen, wholesalers, retailers and all who depend on or love the rose.

The Exhibition.

Under a most formidable patronage representing the wealth and all its power and influence in New York, Boston and Baltimore, set in rooms which are admittedly the handsomest public rooms on the continent if not of the world, the second annual exhibition of the American Rose Society opened here at the Waldorf-Astoria, on Tuesday afternoon, March 19, and closed on Friday night of the same week. From a superficial examination of the names, the place, the city, and the many connections with this show, the "far-aways" would naturally picture it as an assured tremendous success. Alas, such was not the case. It was a gigantic paradox. A great success as an exhibition of American rose growing, for the roses, what there were, were magnificent. A success for the future of the American Rose Society, because a greater interest has been awakened among the wealthier classes, but from a business, financial and artistic point of view it was a failure.

Pity it was (and we sincerely hope for the benefit of the society the lesson has sunk deep) that the active membership of the society did not do the planning and managing of the exhibition. We were informed on very good authority that the expense of laying out the grand ball-room for this occasion reached over $1,100, and what was it like? The ladies' committee wanted something unusual and they were given full sway. An architect and a landscape engineer were given full privilege to execute their dreams, and the result was advertised to be "an ideal Italian rose garden" (why Italian we may never know). As we have previously stated the best artists of the country are responsible for the permanent decorations of this ball-room. The rose show architect built at one end a semi-circular colonnade of Roman pillars, fifteen feet high, and over them put a trellised roof similar to the kind seen in beer gardens. The landscape engineer surrounded the room with a twenty-foot hedge of junipers and in the center of the room four rectangular beds outlined by the same material. Two of these beds were filled with roses in pots, the other two with a miscellaneous assortment of flowering plants. In one corner of the room a lot of Japanese junk was framed off to simulate something from the Orient. Where the Italian rose garden was we failed to discover. The only thing apparent was a great display of ignorance, dearly paid for by the American Rose Society.

The real exhibition was held in the conservatory, the Astor gallery and the Myrtle room. The carnation display was an exceedingly good one, no better blooms were ever shown. All the great new ones were there: Prosperity, not for competition but defiant in grandeur; Governor Roosevelt, a magnet of attraction, and Morning Glory covered itself with glory. Mr. Ward's several new seedlings, Dorothy Whitney, Viola Allen, Harry Fenn, Golden Beauty and others, received praise from the most critical. The carnations were in a cool place and kept in good condition for the four days. The rose exhibit was arranged in a long bed on the floor in the center of the Astor gallery. There might have been 20,000 cut roses staged. Very few of the old varieties were seen, just one vase of dear old Bon Silene, about six poor specimens of Marechal Niel, two jars of Papa Gontier, one or two of De Watteville, some of Hoste, Perle, Sunset and Moss; the rest, with the exception of the very new claimants, were of the sorts to be seen in every wholesale house. The quantity and quality of the American Beauties shown here, though, has never been equaled anywhere. They were grand beyond description and gave the judges lots of trouble. There were no hybrid perpetuals shown. It seems strange that many of our largest growers who are devoting time and money to these events cannot spare a small section of their immense establishment to the growing of a few special varieties of roses for these shows. One thing was forcibly demonstrated, that the best roses shown were grown outside the 150-mile radius of New York. Those from the Dale Estate, Brampton, Ontario, were finely interesting, and Utica did nobly. The Penn. boys can always succeed in winning if they set about to do it.

No definite awards were made until the second day, which occasioned considerable adverse criticism. The room was warm. Men from a distance wanted to get home the same night, and many roses far ahead on the first day were, through no fault of the exhibitors, away behind on the second day.

The retail section was poorly represented, and the work they offered was worthy of some village. Exhibits from private gardeners were almost exclusively confined to a few good men at Seabright, N. J. All honor to Messrs. Butterbach, Hale, Wengerter, Dowlen and Kettel from that section; it is not the first time they have distinguished themselves. There were several protests against the judging recorded. Mr. Warendorf's wedding and mantel decorations were deservedly considered unworthy, though the only ones put up; the best steamer basket was ruled out because the flowers were in water, and so on. There will always be kicking. The retailers are not altogether in the wrong: leave them to make their own classes and select whom they consider competent judges and things might be more creditable.

The greatest amount of praise is due the officers who worked day and night in order to make the affair a success. Admission the first day was $5 and $1 each succeeding day. J. P. Cleary auctioned off a considerable lot of plants on Thursday night and the cut flowers on Friday night. The Beauties, after being four days in the place, were sold for ten cents each, other stock brought good prices and a considerable sum was thus added to the general fund. The treasurer, Mr. May, informed us that owing to a great many tickets being out among the patronesses, the financial end of the show would not be known for some time. The tickets sold at the door, however, fell far below expectations.

Following is a list of the awards:

Section A—Open to All. Twenty-five Blooms.

American Beauty—First, Myers & Samtman, Philadelphia; second, J. Heacock, Wyncote, Pa.; third, H. Hentz, Jr., Madison, N. J.

Bride—First, J. H. Dunlop, Toronto; second, H. Hentz, Jr.; third, Dale Estate, Brampton, Ont.

Bridesmaid—First, Dale Estate; second, J. H. Dunlop; third, H. Hentz.

Meteor—First, J. H. Dunlop; second, Dale Estate.

Mrs. Pierpont Morgan—First, Dale Estate; second, J. N. May.

Mme. Hoste—First, Dale Estate.

Perle des Jardins—First, Dale Estate.

Sunset—First, Dale Estate.

Golden Gate—First, American Rose Co., Washington; second, J. H. Taylor, Bay Side, New York.

Mme. Chatenay—First, American Rose Co.

Papa Gontier—First, J. N. May.

Bon Silene—First, J. N. May.

Lady Dorothea—First, J. H. Dunlop.

Liberty—First, Taylor.

Section B—Growers Having Not More Than 20,000 Feet. Twelve Blooms.

American Beauty—First, Richter & Barton, Madison, N. J.

Bride—First, Righter & Barton.

Bridesmaid—First, Richter & Barton.

Papa Gontier—First, P. R. Quinlan, Syracuse, New York.

Section C—Open to Private Gardeners, twelve Blooms.

American Beauty—Second, J. Dowlen.

Bride—First, G. H. Hale; second, N. Butterbach; third, Dowlen.

Bridesmaid—First, H. Kettel; second, Hale.

Kaiserin Augusta Victoria—Second, J. Dowlen.

Mrs. Pierpont Morgan—First, Hale; second, Dowlen.

President Carnot—First, Dowlen.

Perle des Jardins—First, W. L. Stow; second, Dowlen.

Golden Gate—First, Stow.

La France—Second, Dowlen.

Marechal Niel—Third, O. McIntosh.

Section F—Open to Private Gardeners. Single Specimen Blooms.

American Beauty—First, Hale; second, Stow; third, Dowlen.

Bride—First, Hale; second, Dowlen; third, Butterbach.

Bridesmaid—First, Hale; second, Butterbach.

Kaiserin Augusta—Second, Butterbach.

Mrs. Pierpont Morgan—First, Hale; second, Dowlen.

President Carnot—First, Dowlen.

Perle des Jardins—First, Stow; second, Dowlen.

Golden Gate—First, Stow.

La France—Third, Dowlen.

Mrs. Robert Garrett—Third, Dowlen.

Marechal Niel—Second, Butterbach.

Liberty—First, Butterbach.

Any Other Disseminated Variety—First, Butterbach.

Section G—Open to all Groups, Plants.

Display of roses in pots arranged for effect and covering 50 square feet—First, H. C. Steinhoff; second, H. A. Siebrecht.

Single specimen plant in not larger than 8-inch pots (climbers excepted)—First, Steinhoff.

Climbing Rose in Pots—Specimen in tub or pot (not less than twelve inches): First, H. C. Steinhoff; second, Siebrecht & Son.

Standard, single specimen plant—First, Steinhoff.

SECTION H—Novelties. .. ..

Certificates to Queen of Edgely, Robert Scott, Ivory and Florence Pemberton.

Six blooms of any variety, introduced since 1898—First, J. N. May, with Mrs. Oliver Ames.

SPECIAL PRIZES.

The Steeckel Cup for 36 garden roses in pots was awarded to Siebrecht & Son, New Rochelle, New York.

The Asmus Prize for 50 blooms of Liberty was taken by B. Dorrance.

The Taylor Cup for best vase of any new rose was won by the Queen of Edgely, from the Floral Exchange, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Michell Cup, of H. F. Michell, Philadelphia, Pa., in a close competition, was ultimately taken by B. Dorrance, Dorrancetown, Pa., for best display of cut roses, grown 150 miles or more from New York City.

Hitchings Cup, $100, to Peter Crowe, Utica, N. Y., with Bride.

Stow Cup, for long-stemmed American Beauty Roses, was won by Mr. Stow's own gardener, who exhibited blooms of very superior quality on stems of surprising length.

Display of Bulbous Plants, Mr. Newbold's Prize: First, Cornelius N. Bliss, Gardener N. Butterbach, Oceanic, N. J.; second, Siebrecht & Son.

Mrs. Henry Clews' Prize for 50 White Roses: First, American Rose Co.; second, Peter Crowe, with Ivory and Bride respectively.

Mrs. Richard Irvin's prize for Moss Roses: J. N. May, first; Siebrecht & Son, second.

Young & Nugent's Cup for 50 Bride and 50 Bridesmaid, went to H. Dale Estate, Brampton, Ont., Canada.

American Beauty Roses, 50 blooms on not less than four-foot stems, in strong competition: H. Hentz, Jr., first; L. A. Noe, second; J. Heacock, third. The Lord & Burnham Challenge Cup, value $250, was taken by H. Hentz, Jr., in the above class.

For 50 Blooms, any variety, Beauty excepted: First, American Rose Co., with Ivory, and second, J. H. Dunlop, with Meteor.

The Blair Cup for 100 Roses, was won by B. Dorrance with Liberty.

Miss Child's Prize for Mignonette: First, J. N. May; second, H. Spavins, Mt. Kisco, New York.

Bartlett Cup for collection of Orchids: J. Roehrs, Rutherford, N. J.

Dreer Cup, by the H. A. Dreer Co., Philadelphia, Pa., for decorative plants, to Cornelius N. Bliss, N. Butterbach, gardener.

Mrs. Loomis' Prize for pot Roses was taken by Siebrecht & Son.

Miss Callender's Prize for Carnations, dark red: First, C. W. Ward, Queens, N. Y.; second, J. N. May; third, J. H. Taylor.

Mrs. Gambrill's Prize for best new plant was won by H. A. Dreer & Co. with Pandanus Sanderi.

Mr. Berwind's Prize for ornamental plants, 100 square feet: First, Siebrecht & Son; second, H. L. Terrell, Gardener J. Dowlen.

The American Line Steamship Company's Prize for arrangement of flowers for steamer use was won by Warendorf, New York City.

Mrs. Burke Roche's Prize for decorative plants, gardeners only, was won by H. L. Terrell, Gardener J. Dowlen.

Mrs. Burke Roche's Prize for Lily of the Valley: First, E. G. Asmus; second, Siebrecht & Son.

Mrs. Storrs Wells' Prize for Gardenias, Siebrecht & Son.

Mrs. Burke Roche's Prize for collection of Carnations: First, C. W. Ward; second, J. H. Taylor.

The S. Burns' Prize, for 200 blooms of Mrs. T. W. Lawson Carnations was won by Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.

Mrs. C. Alexander's Prize for 50 blooms of Lawson: Peter Fisher.

Mrs. W. Douglas' Prize for display of Violets: First, O. Van Roden; second, H. Dale Estate.

Mrs. Mason's Prize for table decoration, lady for eight covers: Siebrecht & Son.

Mr. Mushenheim's Prize for table decoration: J. H. Small & Son, New York.

Mrs. Cleveland H. Mackay's Prize for mirror decoration of Orchids: Siebrecht & Son.

The Dutchess Co. Hort. Society Prize for wedding decoration: Siebrecht & Son.

A final certificate was awarded to the Queen of Edgely, which kept in splendid condition up to Friday night. Preliminary certificates were awarded to Robt. Scott & Son for Florence Pemberton, a very large rose after the color, form and growth of Golden Gate, and to their new rose, Robert Scott, which showed up finely and was greatly admired. The American Rose Co. got one for Ivory, or the White Golden Gate, and B. Dorrance one for his new rose Sarah Nesbitt. The New York Botanical Garden arranged an interesting group of plants, as did also W. A. Manda, of South Orange.

There were a great many noted visitors in attendance. The official judges were P. Breitmeyer, H. Small, E. Buettner, James Blair, Chester Davis, W. Doyle, W. K. Partridge, H. Hentz and J. W. Withers. J. I. D.

Cambridge, Mass.—A. F. Coolidge reports that pinks have sold fairly well all winter, but violets have been a drug on the market. Easter is expected to better conditions.

CARNATION NOTES.

Easter Prices.

Most of us are now trying to get an idea of how many carnation blooms we shall be able to cut during the week preceding Easter, so we can know how many orders we can safely accept. If we could depend on a certain amount of sunshine we could just about tell how many blooms there will be; but the weather is so uncertain during these two months of March and April that one can not tell from one day to the next what the weather will be like. It also makes it unsafe to save up the blooms too long, as the last week before Easter is liable to be quite warm, and blooms that have already been kept a week will not last in good condition through another week of warm weather. grumble at paying Easter prices for poor stock that is to be used a week before Easter. The most satisfactory way we have found is to ship in your blooms regularly and begin charging Easter prices on Monday morning, and give your customers notice a few days ahead. By giving the plants a few degrees of extra heat you can force out a good many more blooms, and it will be much more satisfactory all round. You may be able to force your customers to take your saved up blooms at a high figure, because perhaps they have been depending on you and they have to have the blooms to help them out, and you may pat yourself on your back and say, "Old man, you worked them that time"; but pretty soon you will be wondering why these same customers are not buying much from you, [illegible] early yet as the ground is cold and wet and we shall have several hard frosts yet and much rain [illegible] before we can lay our plans now so that when planting time comes we will be prepared to go right at it systematically, as it is a big job with most of us and it should be done in the shortest time possible. Keep the young stock growing and shift all those that need it to keep them from getting pot bound and stunted. They will have to remain inside at least three weeks yet, and many of them will not be out before two weeks after that. Pinch them, too, as it may be needed to keep them bushy. I know you are as busy now as you can be, but that is no excuse for neglecting your next season's stock. Hire more help if it is necessary, but by all means keep your young stock in good condition.

The Carnations at the Exhibition of the American Rose Society at New York last week.

I think, though, growers ought not to be too greedy and not try to save their blooms unreasonably long, as many growers always do. Prices usually go up a week before Easter, and the growers should be satisfied if they get the advanced prices for all they can cut during a whole week before Easter and not try to save all they cut a week before the prices go up.

Haven't you ever noticed how scarce stock sometimes is about ten days before Christmas or Easter? Those prices are really only meant for stock that is to be retailed for that special day, and prices are advanced a week before so that the grower can share the good prices with the retailer, who can not now buy up a lot of stuff while it is cheap and save it in good condition until he needs it for his Easter or Christmas sales. But the grower should not impose upon him by selling him a lot of stock on Monday that has to be gotten rid of by Wednesday in order to keep from losing it altogether.

Many retailers are obliged to buy up all the stock they can get hold of during the whole week in order to have enough to fill their orders, and if they get fresh stock it works all right; but the sales early in the week are light and people and when you ascertain the reason it will be because they are buying from someone by whom they expect to be better treated.

Temperature and Moisture.

Just now we are having bright, sunny days and high, dry winds, which are extremely trying on our carnation plants after the many cloudy days we have been having all winter. This has been a very dark, cloudy winter all the way through. Do not open the ventilators more than is necessary to keep the temperature below 80 degrees, and dampen the walks to keep the atmosphere moist. The dry wind will them more than the sun. This will be necessary only a few days, as the growth will soon become hardened and able to stand the bright sun and all the air there is. Notice the condition of the soil each day so there will be no very dry spots, as the blooms will soon begin to come small if the plants are allowed to suffer from drouth on warm, bright days. The reds will come light in color and many of the pink varieties will look washy unless they have plenty of water.

Preparing for Planting Out.

These warm days make one begin to think of planting the young stock in the field. Of course, it is several weeks too

Preparing the Ground.

We always plow our field twice each year, once late in the fall after all the plants are dug, and we plow as deeply as possible this time, so that the frost during the winter can penetrate deep down. Toward spring and while the ground is still frozen enough to bear up the wagon we spread on a coat of manure and in spring as soon as it is dry enough we plow it in, but we plow only about one-half as deep as we do in the fall, so as to keep the manure near the surface, where it will keep the ground mellow and the roots can reach it to feed upon. The distance between the rows must depend on how you intend to cultivate them and the amount of ground you have to plant on. Some growers use a horse and shovel plow and the rows in that case must be at least 24 inches apart, but we use a hand cultivator and our rows are 15 inches apart, which is plenty. These cultivators do the work much quicker than the old fashioned hoe, but of course you have to go over them once or twice in a season and weed between the plants. The plants are set 8 to 12 inches apart in the row according to variety. To those who only plant a few thousand and have plenty of room, a few inches each way does not seem of much importance, but when you plant out from 50,000 to 100,000 it amounts up, and an acre, more or less, of ground to tend makes some difference in the labor bill, especially if the season is wet and the weeds grow like they did through these regions last summer.

Do not plant carnations on the same ground year after year if you can help it. Every second or third year is much better and work in a good lime dressing before each carnation planting. If you have much stem-rot you should not plant carnations on that ground again for several seasons, and, better still, never again, as you are likely to be troubled again and perhaps worse than before. It pays to plant out early, but do not try to work the ground before it is dry enough to crumble when it is turned over. If it is worked too wet it will remain stiff and cloddy all summer and only next winter's frosts will make it friable and fit to grow good plants again.

JUDGING ROSES BY POINTS.

By Benj. DuPree.

Read before the American Rose Society Mar 20

Mr. President and Gentlemen—What does this exhibition emphasize this year more than ever before? That you must encourage by every means in your power the Canadian, Western and Southern contingents in their efforts to preserve sovereignty for the rose. Bold and aggressive warfare against this numberless army of carnation seedlings that is besetting our citadel and sapping and mining us with all the dashing vigor of youth. In our conscious superiority we had sunk into a peaceful, rather benignant and patronizing attitude. Centuries of undisputed sway have made the present generation of rosarians believe their coats of mail impenetrable. We need armor plate now.

But we must "up and at them, boys." We must change front and from a war of roses it must be a war by roses. We are willing the carnation should occupy a modest standing, but let it beware of assaulting our stronghold and attempting to usurp the queenly robes. Roosevelt and Prosperity are high-sounding titles and they are needed if you would gild the modest pink, but the rose, the gorgeous rose, even "by any other name," must dominate.

You may broaden the petals of your carnation, and lengthen and stiffen the stem; you may rival the kaleidoscope in colors, and still the carnation is a "light and airy nothing." You talk about your four and five-inch flowers, they are but soap bubbles and collapse as quickly. I venture the assertion that good old La Purite or Peerless in point of substance would outweigh most any of today's favorites. Put one American Beauty in the scales and see it weigh down a dozen, aye two dozen, of your boasted leaders with pedigrees prolonged. Put one Beauty in a room and it bathes your senses with its fragrance. It seeks you. It is not ruled—it rules. But what of the carnation? We must hunt for the perfume.

Size, beyond a good standard 2½ to 3-inch flower is not what the commercial grower wants in a carnation, but freedom of bloom and beauty of color. He does not want, nor does the public, a carnation so large that its weary and sleepy air must contribute pain rather than delight. One would imagine that many of the modern carnations had made their home with poppies.

But, Mr. President, I rose to speak a few words concerning the scale of points for judges, as applied to novelties which we, as a society, have adopted. What are they? Size, color, stem, form, substance, foliage, fragrance and distinctiveness. In other words they are the elements that are open to observation such as this exhibition permits. A few hours of rather hasty and perhaps confused effort of the judges may enable them to fairly apply this scale to the exhibits. But when you have awarded the medals and certificates, how much weight will they carry to the cautious and observant grower and retailer? Scarcely any, and why? Because the most vital and necessary conditions are unknown, viz.:

Freedom of Bloom,
Keeping and Shipping Qualities,
Health and Vigor.

Without a certificate as to these qualities I predict that the first sale of future novelties in carnations and roses will be reduced to the smallest possible figures, not at all commensurate with the success which a worthy novelty should and would command if properly endorsed.

It is imperative that this society should adopt some method by which certainty on these points shall form a part of the decision of the judges, or otherwise the profit for the grower of novelties, which is the great stimulant to advancement, will be of the past. You may ask me why, and I reply that under our scale of points the award might be made of 100 per cent, and yet the novelty be commercially valueless. It is our province to protect the growers and retailers against such results. We must so affix our seal to such novelties in this line that it shall be a sign manual of commercial excellence under fair and careful conditions of culture.

The hollow gold statue of Maude Adams is being exhibited throughout the country as "All Gold." Don't let our certificates and medals become but hollow mockeries. Cannot this accurate certificate be secured in some way? Is it not possible to accomplish this through an active and continuing committee, by personal observation, sub-divided for localities so as to secure a minimum of expense? Would not any introducer of a novelty be more than willing to pay the cost of such personal investigation at different periods of the growing of the novelty, through such a committee of this society?

This is offered as a suggestion for the men of ripe and mature judgment in the society, and with the most sincere desire to enlarge the field of profit to the introducer, by restoring the feeling of confidence in the grower which has been slowly but surely undermined through "being bit," and to make the verdict of our society unimpeachable.

It might perhaps be more practicable to have an independent scale of points to cover the elements of freedom of bloom, freedom from disease, keeping and shipping qualities, of which the introducer might avail himself at his option and at his own expense, to strengthen the exhibition certificate.

Quincy, Ill.—F. W. Heckenkamp will add a new house for carnations, and Jos. Kroner one for roses.

When you want to buy any stock our classified advs. will save you time and money.

CHRYSANTHEMUM NOTES.

Raising new varieties from seed is an interesting pastime, and if one has the time and inclination and no great desire for financial returns, he will find this a fascinating experiment.

I say, if he has no great desire for financial returns because there isn't much money in it. Out of a batch of a thousand seedlings you may not get more than one or two, and possibly even none at all that would be worth naming unless you were indifferent as to your future reputation.

There are one or two men in this country who have been doing good work in the raising of new seedlings, crossing in a systematic manner standard varieties, but they are very few, and the work here does not seem to arouse the general interest that it does in France and Australia. The latter country seems to be going into it very extensively, and many new varieties that are being raised in England are from Australian saved seed. A new variety of Pockett's is, I see, named Lady Roberts, a rich crimson with gold reverse. Canada also has raised and named its Lady Roberts, which is a white variety, so by and by I suppose they will clash. Many of the Australian and French varieties are useless here, because the commercial instinct predominates and only clear, decided colors sell readily in our markets. So many of the varieties that are unsurpassed for exhibition flowers are practically useless for commercial work, and they sink into an early grave.

Mons. Chenon de Leche is a great favorite of mine as an exhibition flower. It was raised by Calvat, if I remember correctly, and is a very peculiar color, crushed strawberry shaded yellow is about as near as I can come to it.

Kate Broomhead is another good exhibition variety of peculiar color, which is a sort of golden amber, a very vigorous variety.

Mr. T. Carrington is an immense flower of carmine rose color. While the color is very dirty when placed alongside a good pink, as an exhibition flower it is a whopper.

Harking back to raising new varieties from seed, if the reader is proposing to go into it, he should sow his seed at once. Either Japanese or home saved seed can be procured from a good seedsman. Use nice, light soil and place in a temperature of about 60 degrees. When the seed is germinated and the young plants begin to grow, gradually harden them off and prick them out into flats. When large enough they could be planted outside and lifted in the fall before frost. It is astonishing the diversity of forms and colors a batch of seedlings presents, most of them, of course, reverting back toward the primitive yellow flowered Indicum.

Possibly you may get one that will make Timothy Eaton look like 30 cents or less. It is always best to look at things with optimistic eyes. If you do get a good one, of course you will name it after yourself or your wife, with all becoming modesty, and wish you were in England, where the guileless nurseryman puts out his new variety at 7-and-6 or 10 shillings per plant, expressage and packing extra, and yet we think those fellows are slow over there.

House of Bulbous Flowers Grown by Peter Weiland.

BULBOUS FLOWERS.

The accompanying engraving is from a photograph of a house of bulbous flowers grown by Peter Weiland at his father's establishment in Evanston, Ill. He has been very successful with bulbous flowers and in response to a question says:

"I don't believe in attempting to force tulips or daffodils before Jan. 2. I generally start the first batch on that date, setting them under the bench for a few days, and then placing on heating pipes until almost ready to open. Then they go up on the bench."

THE PHILADELPHIA SHOW.

The spring exhibition of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society was held last week in Horticultural Hall. The plants and flowers shown were well grown, the color effects were beautiful, and the arrangements excellent. The society is doing good work for the advancement of horticulture, and to many of its members these spring shows are second in point of interest only to the fall exhibitions. The standard of excellence as seen in this instance was a little higher than in the past, which is something to be proud of.

The features of the main hall were the groups of foliage and flowering plants, beautifully arranged with quantities of spring flowers brightening up the tropical green. These groups were shown by Francis Canning, Joseph Hurley, John Thatcher and Westcott's Nurseries. The stage was banked with specimen plants of Latania borbonica. On one side was an Easter window by Jos. Kift & Son, effectively arranged with foliage, flowers and ribbon and brightly lighted from above. On the other side was Robt. Craig & Son's exhibit of carnations, fancy varieties well grown. The rest of the hall was filled with plants, nearly all in full bloom, the large specimens on the floor, the shorter ones arranged on tables, the general effect being rich to a degree.

Curiously enough the plant that impressed me most was not an azalea, genista, spirea or cineraria, but a huge Chrysanthemum frutescens! Yes, you may well smile, only a common Paris daisy, but grown as I have never seen a daisy grown before. Perfect in form and foliage, with hundreds of open flowers and more buds than flowers.

Pandanus Sanderi, shown by H. A. Dreer, made its first bow and received a silver medal as the first act of a specially appointed committee. This committee is formed of experts who are recognized authorities each in his own line and is intended to give proper examination to all novelties shown before the society. The plan is for intending exhibitors of novelties to notify Secretary Rust one week before a meeting of the society at which the plant is to be shown. These meetings are held on the third Tuesday in each month. The novelty must be staged at 3 p. m. on that day, in order to be judged by daylight, and must remain for the regular exhibition, which begins at 8 p. m. The week's notice is to enable Secretary Rust to get the committee together, and not as in the past to have to select judges from among those present. The committee has for its chairman Edwin Lonsdale, a recognized authority on plants and flowers and who has made a special study of most of the novelties recently introduced. The other members of the committee are each specialists in their line, the mere mention of whose names carries confidence in the ability and fairness of their decisions.

To return to the exhibition. The bulbous stock was shown in large pans, proving a feature. Daffodils, tulips, Dutch and Roman hyacinths, valley, all done in a way to delight the hearts of each and every member of the invading army of foreign salesmen that G. C. W. mourns so forcefully.

H. Weber & Sons, Oakland, Md., had a fine lot of carnations, including a vase of 100 Lawsons, grand flowers. The only roses that didn't go to New York were two vases of Ivory (white Golden Gate) from the American Rose Co., Washington, and one vase of Beauties from Adolph Fuhrenwald, of Hillside, Mont. Co. The former is a pretty thing that has some good points, the latter were fine blooms with long, heavy stems.

Three seed firms, Dreer, Landreth and Michell, had exhibits of seeds, bulbs and implements in the hall at the foot of the main stairway.

What the attendance lacked in quantity (the weather was very unfavorable on Wednesday) it made up in quality; everybody seemed appreciative of the really good show.

PRIZE WINNERS.

The following is a list of the prizes awarded by the judges, consisting of J. W. Colflesh, chairman; W. A. Manda, Joseph Hurley, Chester Davis and James Verner:

Orchids, display of plants and cut flowers, arranged for effect—First prize, $25, to Alphonse Pericat, gardener to Mrs. George B. Wilson.

Ferns, specimen plant—First, to Joseph Hurley, gardener to Mr. James M. Rhodes.

Azaleas, six plants, six varieties—First, to John Hobson, gardener to Mr. Edward A. Schmidt.

Azaleas, two plants, two varieties—First, to John McCleary, gardener to Mr. William Weightmann.

Genistas, three plants First, to George Robertson, gardener to Mr. Clement B. Newbold; second, to Francis Canning, gardener to Mr. Samuel T. Bodine.

Zonal geraniums, six plants, six varieties—First, Joseph Hurley; second, William Robertson, gardener to Mr. John W. Pepper.

Zonal geraniums, specimen plant—One prize, Joseph Hurley.

Roses, specimen plant—One prize, George Robertson.

Astilbe, six plants, three varieties—First, Ernest Schreder, gardener to Mr. William L. Elkins; second, Joseph Hurley.

Marguerites, one plant—First, Joseph Hurley; second, George Robertson.

Primroses, English hybrid, three pans—First, John McCleary.

Pansies, four pans—First, Joseph Hurley; second, John McCleary.

Daisies (Bellis Perennis), two pans, John T. Whittaker, gardener to Mr. Charles F. Lennig; second, John McCleary.

Begonias, flowering varieties, three plants, three varieties—First, John Thatcher, gardener to Mr. Edward Le Boutillier; second, Joseph Hurley.

Begonias, flowering varieties, specimen plant, one prize Joseph Hurley.

Calias, six plants—First, William Robertson; second, John McCleary.

Violets, four pans—First, William Robertson; second, John Whittaker.

PREMIUMS OFFERED BY H. WATERER.

Hyacinths Six pots, six varieties, three bulbs to a pot, first, Joseph Hurley; second, William Kleinheinz, gardener to Mr. P. A. B. Widener.

Narcissus, single—Six pans, six varieties, first, Joseph McGregor, of Darby; second, Francis Canning.

Tulips—Six pans, six varieties, first, Joseph McGregor; second, Thomas Holland.

Lily—Specimen plant, Longiflorum or Harrisii, first, Joseph Hurley; second, Thomas Holland.

OFFERED BY HENRY F. MICHELL.

Cineraria Hybrida—Three best plants, first, George Graham, gardener to Mr. Charles Hartshorne; second, Joseph Burley, gardener.

Calceolaria Hybrida—Three best plants, first, Charles Uffer, gardener to Mr. Robert H. McFadden.

Hyacinths Twelve pots, Roman, either in pots or pans, first, William Kleinheinz; second, Joseph Burley.

Cyclamen—Three best plants in bloom, first, John Thatcher.

Lilium Harrisii—Three best plants, first, Thomas Holland; second, William Kleinheinz.

Narcissus—Von Sion, double, six pots, one variety, Thomas Holland.

D. LANDRETH SON'S PREMIUM.

Primula obconica grandiflora, six plants—First, John Thatcher, second, Christian Warnker, gardener to Mr. H. B. Ellison.

Cineraria, six plants One prize, Joseph McGregor.

Croton, specimen plant One prize, Joseph Burley.

Hyacinths, six pots and six pans, six varieties—One prize, Francis Canning.

HENRY A. DREER'S PREMIUMS.

The prizes offered by Henry A. Dreer, Inc., were open to private gardeners and amateurs only.

Hyacinths, White Roman, three pots or pans—First, Joseph Burley, second, John McGregor.

Jonquils, two pots or pans, in two varieties—First, Joseph Burley.

Freesias, two pots or pans—First, Joseph McGregor; second, John McCleary.

Lily of the Valley, two pots or pans—First, Robert Forrest, gardener to Mr. Beauvean Borie; second, John H. Dobbs, gardener to Mr. H. S. Hopper, Narberth.

OFFERED BY R. & J. FARQUHAR & CO.

Cyclamen, best six plants in bloom—First, John H. Dobbs; second, George Robertson.

Primula Chinensis, best six plants in bloom—First Francis Canning; second, Joseph McGregor.

OTHER AWARDS.

Vaughan's prize for pansies, Joseph McGregor.

Plant decorations, open to private gardeners only, decoration of growing plants, to occupy not over 100 square feet of space—First, Francis Canning.

Vegetables, open to growers of exhibits only, best general display of not less than twelve sorts—First, John McCleary; second, William Robertson.

Special prizes were awarded as follows: To Joseph Burley, for group of flowering plants; certificate to Thomas Holland, for Cineraria stellata; prize to Westcroft Nurseries, for group of decorative plants; certificate to William Robertson, for specimen plant of geranium; certificate to John McCleary, for group of flowering plants; silver medal to Henry A. Dreer, for the new Pandanus Sanderi; certificate to William Thatcher, gardener to Mrs. John Gardiner, of Boston, Mass., for new asparagus; prize to Joseph McGregor, for best exhibit of hyacinths showing most skill in culture.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

There is at present little change from last week aside from a trifle sharper demand for roses at the previously ruling rates and an increase in the scarcity of white carnations. The gloomy weather continues and if we are favored with a few sunshiny days just before the coming holiday there would undoubtedly be a large increase in the supply at the right time, but stock may be a little soft. At present Beauties are of good quality and are in brisk demand, as are also good long Brides and Maids, though the shorts are inclined to hang a little.

Lilies are moving well and present rates are nearly up to Easter quotations. We hear of several big lots of lilies not previously reported, but it is still evident there will be none too many though possibly not the serious shortage feared at one time. There will be an abundance of Dutch bulbous stock of good quality.

All the wholesalers have already booked large advance orders for Easter and the business for this holiday is confidently expected to break all records.

Various Items.

Mr. Peter Reinberg says that during and after the heavy snow storm he had a great deal of glass broken on the old style wooden gutter houses by melting snow and ice, but that not a single light was broken on the Garland iron gutter houses. He thinks the iron gutters made excellent returns on the investment in this way. It is the starting of the melting at the gutter instead of at the ridge, permitting no accumulations to later slide down, that makes the difference.

A. Dietsch & Co., manufacturers of greenhouse building material, report business far in excess of last year. Though glass continues to soar above the five dollar mark, building seems not to be checked.

A bill has been introduced in the state legislature at Springfield looking to the consolidation of all the park boards into one of seven members, to be known as the Board of Public Parks.

The Chicago Tribune urges the formation of an organization in this city on the lines of the Home Gardening Association of Cleveland, which distributes flower seeds to school children at less than cost to stimulate a love of gardening among the children.

Leading retailers report that the Lenten season has been the quietest in years, so many large users of flowers have been away, in California or Florida. They hope the wanderers will return in time for Easter. Nevertheless the season as a whole has averaged good.

McKellar & Winterson have been doing a big business in supplies for Easter. This has included a big lot of the silver birch bark ware, over 400 pieces going with one order. John Sterret is again with this firm and is taking hold at this busy season with his accustomed vigor.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. put up an elaborate decoration for the spring opening at the Siegel-Cooper store. The main aisles were turned into avenues of blooming peach trees, lilacs, etc. The flowers were artificial but the trees and shrubs were the real thing and green was supplied by wild smilax. It simulated nature very closely and was very effective.

Mr. Thompson, of the Michigan Seed Co., South Haven, Mich., was a recent visitor, as was also John Bertermann, of Indianapolis.

Mr. John Schneider, the veteran florist of Kansas City, is in the city sizing up the Easter situation and incidentally keeping the bell boys at the Palmer House busy.

The Rogers Park Floral Co., consisting of Paul Gaertner and Edw. Grunendorf, have started in business with three greenhouses at 506-508 Tuohy avenue. For the present the glass will be devoted to bedding plants.

S. M. Michaels now has his store at 510 North Robey street.

Kennicott Bros. Co. have made their usual complete arrangements for handling a big Easter business and are receiving many advance orders.

Wietor Bros. are cutting a fine lot of carnations having several large houses just coming in crop.

Bassett & Washburn will have a big lot of lilies as well as a full line of other stock for Easter.

Word has been received that the S. A. F. will give one silver medal and one bronze medal for new and meritorious plants of American origin at the next fall exhibition of the Horticultural Society of Chicago.

BUFFALO.

Business has been just fair and cannot expect much till the great week arrives. We expect a very lively Easter and every one is feeling good and there are already a great many strangers in town, birds of passage, who will be here until next November.

As mentioned in a previous note, lilies are scarce. Palmer has a nice lot of Japans, as well as a good lot of azaleas. Rebstock has a large lot of Japans just right for date, but the majority rather short. He has a splendid lot of azaleas and a thousand hybrid roses, but his leading article is 300 or 400 well bloomed Crimson Ramblers. Joe says they can't be beat in the country, and he is about right. They were grown in pots last summer. C. F. Christensen has a thousand very fine Harrisii, and at the Cold Springs establishment of William Scott you will find lilies, ramblers, azaleas and other stock in about the right proportion. W. Milley has enough cinerarias to supply us all. Neubeck & Myers have a well balanced supply of the leading plants. Of bulbous stock, spiraea, cytisus, mignonette and other Easter plants, there are plenty, but I don't believe one too many.

Kasting is preparing to receive large shipments from out-of-town growers, and will doubtless do a big business, as he did last year with the order book in his hand and prancing about among the blocks of lilies, azaleas and Rambler roses, singing out the prices he wants. He is almost as much at home as he is at a democratic convention.

Joseph H. Rebstock has just returned from a flying trip to California, where he went to bring home Mrs. Rebstock, who went there for her health, and she is better.

Visitors in town are not very numerous, unless you count the Hollanders. Four of them in one day, but we escaped them all. Mr. Nelson Bogue, of Batavia, was in looking at the Pan-American and Mr. Boddington laid off over Sunday here and we showed him over the Exposition. Like all visitors, he was greatly surprised at its magnitude and beauty, although this is just the time when the grounds are at their worst.

The Florists' Club met last Thursday and elected officers for the coming year. We had all made up our minds who were the right ones to carry the work of the society through this important year. There was only one spirited contest, and that was when David J. Scott nearly beat out the veteran Keitsch for the position of treasurer. David is a business boy, even if his own papa has to say it. At present his mind runs largely to field-grown pansies, but he may get over that. The officers elected are: President, W. F. Kasting; vice president, James Braik; secretary, William Legg; financial secretary, Emil Bruecker; treasurer, Charles H. Keitsch; who, with the election of John F. Cowell, D. B. Long and William Scott, will be the board of directors. We have dignified ourselves by the name of "Directors," but our pay is not raised.

Captain James Braik is a comparatively recent addition to our active ranks and a welcome one. He brings avoirdupois, energy, ability, snap and the best of good fellowship into our deliberations. His only weakness is, he does love a game of bowls. He will absent himself from a prayer meeting or any other meeting to trundle the spheroid. I would lock John Westcott and Captain Braik up in a bowling alley for twenty-four hours and make them bowl all the time without a drop of usquebaugh to relieve their exhaustion, and if I wanted to break a man's heart I would only allow George McClure to look through the keyhole.

I have digressed. Not only the officers, but every member of the club, must work hard this summer for the credit of our club and our fair city.

I believe we only sent one delegate to the Rose show, and that was W. J. Palmer. Will you please notice how brilliantly the two great rose growers of Ontario came off, actually taking the principal prizes for the great commercial roses. This pleases me, because I live so near the border, but beyond that I want Mr. E. M. Wood to realize that besides sun, soil and brains, and a few other trifling incidentals, the great factor in producing these wonderful roses is butted glass. W. S.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The cut flower market continues active for the season; white flowers, choice roses and all grades of carnations are in demand, also greens; violets and daffodils are poor, the Greeks having both in quantity. Lady Campbell is an exception to the above, this variety still being in fine form. Many of the poor daffs are from the south, but some came from over the water. Sweet peas are more plentiful, nice blooms are in demand at $1.50 per 100; poor ones are hard to sell at any price. Prices on other flowers are about as quoted last week excepting that fancy Beauties are a shade lower and second class Maids are in over supply and often sold cheaply in consequence.

Easter Stock.

Easter stuff is a matter of deep interest now. It is impossible to give a complete view of the field, here is a partial glimpse: Jacob Becker is sold out of lilies already; has azaleas, pot roses, etc.; Samuel J. Bunting has lilies, hydrangeas, spiraeas and a variety of Easter stock; this is his specialty. William K. Harris is strong on genistas, azaleas and other Easter stock; has few lilies this year. Robert Craig & Son are strong on lilies, azaleas and other blooming stock. Chas. Mecky has his usual variety of Easter stock except lilies. Julius Koehler & Son have a good assortment of well grown stuff. Albert Woltemate has a fine lot of Easter stock, the novelty being Japan snowballs, very effective for church decoration. George Anderson has fine lilies and (I think) hydrangeas.

Various Items.

The exhibition of the American Rose Society at the "Hyphen"—Here you must ask "Where is the Hyphen?" It is between the Waldorf and Astoria! Isn't that great?—last week showed that Philadelphia Beauties are in the front rank as of yore. Myers & Samtman, Joseph Heacock and Adolph Fahrenwald all won laurels with this rose. The other features of interest to Philadelphians were that H. H. Battles offered a silver cup for the best display of orchids and that the Floral Exchange won the silver medal for the best new rose with Queen of Edgely.

Samuel S. Pennock is receiving some fine Liberties; the very best bring $4 a doz. The chief novelty at Mr. Pennock's is the new adding machine, similar to those used by the banks; a good step forward in the march of progress.

John C. Gracey, 2028 Columbia avenue, besides doing a general florist's business makes a display of fish and aquariums. Mr. Gracey makes the aquariums himself in leisure moments.

George Burton, who has been for some time past with Vaughan's Seed Store in New York, has returned to his father's place at Chestnut Hill.

Edward Reid makes carnations a specialty; besides local business he shipped 35,000 blooms out of town last week.

George M. Moss has been handling lily of the valley from E. G. Asmus ever since he started in business. This valley is of uniformly fine quality.

Chas. E. Meehan has planted his new rose house with La France and Carnot in solid beds. The plants are in nice condition. The first blooms of La France will be fit about Easter.

J. J. Habermehl & Sons have a fine lot of hydrangeas for their retail trade.

Alfred D. Hoag has given up his store on Chestnut street below Seventeenth street.

William Munn is manager for T. E. Bartram, Lansdowne; not Burton, as incorrectly printed last week. Phil.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade is very quiet at present. Stock is decidedly more plentiful, there being more than enough flowers for the demand. As a consequence, some of the downtown store men are once more coming to the front with cheap prices.

There is a good deal of speculation as to the Easter supply. Harrisii's will be the main feature, a few of the well informed parties claiming that they will be quite plentiful, as will also other Easter stock. Easter prices, they say, will go into effect about April 1. The fact that there will be an increased demand for Easter is proven by several large orders that have already been placed.

Prices.

Beauties have weakened somewhat and must be extra fancy to bring $4 per doz. Brides, Maids, Meteors and Golden Gates, extra select, are as high as $6 and $8, but the bulk of them are sold at $3 and $5. Perles and Wootton's from $2 to $4.

The supply of carnations is heavy just now. Fancy stock brings $3 per 100, good common stock from $1.50 to $2. The demand for this stock is very heavy, especially white, which seems scarce, none being left over. The growers of carnations have no complaint to make, as prices have been good all season and very few blooms went to waste, and these conditions will continue until after Easter.

Bulb stock is in fair demand, especially white and the light colors which can be used in funeral work, but it comes in in such great quantities that much is left over and we are a little afraid that it will be scarce at Easter, just when we need it most.

Violets are in about the same fix as bulb stock with prices unchanged from last quotation. Lots of sweet peas are coming in just now which find very little sale at 75 cents per 100.

Notes.

Visitors in town the past week were Joe Rolker, of New York; Arnold Ringier, of Chicago; and Chas. Ford, of New York. The latter was called home by telegram stating that his father had died in Philadelphia. All are well pleased with the trade and have booked plenty of orders.

The Englewan Botanical Club held a meeting last Thursday night at the medical college. Messrs. R. A. Mohr and A.

BOSTON.

Trade Conditions.

Things do go tough! In the case of roses, lilies and violets because of their plentifulness, and in the case of pinks and fine white flowers because of their scarcity. Bulb goods and green material come the nearest to a happy medium, but the only place to look for consolation seems to be Webster's Unabridged. Easter shines before us like an oasis in the desert. Hope, blessed relief of Pandora's box!

Horticultural Hall.

The Horticultural Society must have gone into their building like a lamb. They surely are going out of it with a roaring good exhibition which suggests the old-time simile of the present month.

It strikes me as an unfortunate thing that the commercial fraternity is not more interested in the doings of this society and consequently better represented there. And if not from an aesthetic but few commercial growers, comparatively, visited it.

In the plant classes the leading prize winners were Dr. C. G. Weld, Bayard Thayer, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Mrs. B. P. Cheney, Bussey Institution, W. S. Ewell & Son, E. N. Pierce & Son, H. H. Rogers, Hon. M. T. Stevens, Anson Phelps Stokes, A. G. Noyes, Harvard Botanic Garden, F. J. Rea.

In cut flowers the leading premiums went to Mrs. A. W. Spencer, Col. Chas. Pfaff, E. M. Wood & Co., W. H. Elliott, M. A. Patten, F. A. Blake, Peter Fisher, Briarcliff Greenhouses, W. C. Ward, D. S. Carrigan, H. S. Rand, Wm. Sim, Mrs. F. L. Ames. Gratuities: Col. Chas. Pfaff, Magna Charta roses; Miss M. S. Walker, vase of roses; Col. Chas. Pfaff, display of roses; Charles Evans, mignonette; Norris F. Comley, lilac; C. H. Souther, antirrhinums; Mrs. E. M. Gill, basket of flowers; James Comley, display; Mrs. A. W. Spencer, display; Mrs. E. M. Gill, display.

Goss illustrated the movements of plants influenced by light and gravitation.

W. Jordan reports that he has had quite a fire at his place the past week, causing damage to building and stock of about $50.

C. Young & Sons Co. are very busy now with shipping orders for plants and seeds in which they do a large business.

Beyer, Schray, Sanders and Ostertag were kept busy the past week decorating department stores with plants and cut flowers.

Jessie M. Goode, of the National League of Improvement Association, states that shade trees planted this spring will be in nice condition in 1903 when the World's Fair opens. Next spring will not be such a favorable time and the spring of 1903 will be too late. This is a feature of the city improvement that should be attended to at once. All this work will be to the permanent benefit of St. Louis, if carried out as it should be, and will transform the city, giving St. Louis a charm that will redound to its credit. J. J. B.

point of view, why do they not materialize there strictly from a financial point of view? An even hundred cash prizes on potted plants, ranging from $1 to $25 each, and fifty-five cash prizes and two medals for excellence in cut flowers, is really worth playing for, and alone might account for a stupendous array. Couple this with both good natured and acrimonious rivalry among both commercial and private growers, add the almost frantic zeal of the genuine flower lover and the lover of Boston prestige, and you obtain present conditions. Sixty-eight prizes on fruit and vegetables also add a mite to the situation, and that part of this spring's exhibition is all right, too, but was hardly participated in by persons of interest to readers of this item.

Neither do my constituents figure by any means among the potted plants. In the cut flower department we do much better. Here the E. M. Wood Co. put in a magnificent display of five different varieties of roses, ably seconded by W. H. Elliott, the Exeter Rose Conservatories, John Pritchard, John McFarland, the Piersons, of Scarborough, and several private growers. None of them, however, had the number of varieties nor the number of points to show the judges that the Wood Co. placed. I am inclined to think their Brides and Maids never were equaled.

The carnation department was fronted by Messrs. Patten, Fisher and Pierson, and such names as Comley and Sim could be found on fine bunches of violets.

But such affairs must be seen; they can not be described nor pictured. And half will be the rose and strawberry show, June 20 and 21.

W. J. Dana's Place.

Noting a marked improvement in the output of this place, I took occasion to go out to see if I could find "by what mighty magic," as Othello says, this was being brought about. Hard work and strict attention to business were the only ingredients I recognized in the lotion he applies, however. But he has a strictly first-class range of houses aggregating something like 40,000 feet of glass, very nicely located on the southern slope of a Wellesley Hills incline, of which he takes most excellent care, largely covering pink roses and white roses, but also containing more varieties of plants than growers for the city market usually foster. His plants are first-year grafts, not now so large, perhaps, as they might be, but putting on a prodigious growth that makes one think of Easter, and more particularly of next year's product, since the plants will be left in for at least one more year's work. They are going to be heard from right away.

Mr. Dana is his own grower, pipe fitter and general manager, having reached remarkable efficiency in each respect when his few years' experience in this line of work is considered. His heating arrangements are of his own plan and work admirably. He uses a sixty-horse tubular boiler harnessed up with a fine sixty-foot chimney, to which he gives half the credit. Facilities for liquid manuring are very complete and four automatic ventilators assist in their department. The crop is marketed by means of Salesman Manter, at the Park street market, who advertises himself as "always 'round and always square."

J. S. Manter.

SWEET POTATOES.

In addition to the directions for raising sweet potato plants or "sets" as outlined by a correspondent in a recent issue of the Review allow me to offer the following suggestions:

The extensive growers of sweet potatoes in the South employ a sort of rudely constructed hotbed for the starting of plants. Several inches of cornstalks or other rough material is first laid on the ground to serve as drainage and on this fresh horse manure is placed to the depth of one foot or more and this in turn is covered with four inches of soil. The potatoes are then placed on the soil, not touching, and lightly covered. In place of glass covered sash, a covering of hay is used. In a few days shoots push up to the light in the greatest abundance. As with root cuttings of other plants, roots start at the same time or sooner than the buds, so that each shoot is really an independent plant.

When the plants are four to six inches high, they are "drawn" from the bed by a sidewise pull, aided by pushing the fingers a trifle into the soil close to the plants. The plants, each of which is furnished with an abundance of fibrous roots, are then set in the field at once where they are to remain. In a few days, a second crop of plants will be furnished by the same potatoes and even a third crop may sometimes be had, although the later plants are usually weak. One bushel of seed will produce from 2,500 to 3,000 plants without the necessity of making and potting cuttings.

A similar plan may be followed in northern latitudes, except that a hotbed or greenhouse may be necessary in order to have plants early enough to insure a crop. We have had excellent success here by bedding the potatoes in sand on an ordinary greenhouse bench in four inches of sand about May 15. In twelve to fourteen days the first crop was "drawn" and by June 15 the second crop was ready. A steady bottom heat of 70 to 75 degrees was maintained and the sand kept constantly moist.

The raising of sweet potato plants by this method might easily prove a profitable side line for a florist in a small town or one who has a large number of amateur vegetable gardeners among his customers. Sound seed is essential and it should be carefully handled to prevent rot. Neither cuttings nor pots are necessary. While sweet potatoes may be grown as far north as central Wisconsin, the quality of the tubers is not as good as the New Jersey or southern grown, nor will they keep as well.

Bellevue, Pa.

Chas. T. Siebert:—Please book my order for 100 lbs. of Zinc Never Rust Glazing Points. I have used 5 different kinds of points in the last 12 years, and none of them gave me satisfaction like yours. They will stay in, are easy to drive, no splits or lefts, will hold the glass in place, and do not rust away like all others I have used. Your Zinc Points are easy to take out when making repairs. I have used about 100 lbs. of your Zinc Points in the last two years, and I am perfectly satisfied with them.

Yours truly, F. Burki

WASHINGTON.

Trade Conditions.

With exception of funeral work, business during Lent has been somewhat slow. Prospects for Easter look very bright in regard to lilies.

Gude Bros. say: "We may possibly have enough for our own use, but none to wholesale; other stock more than ever and everything in fine shape." J. R. Freeman's lilies will not be in, but other stock is in abundance. American Rose Company will be left on one whole house of lilies, but at the same time will have enough to go around. White Ivory, their new rose, will be in full crop. J. Louis Loose's lilies will partly be in; will have plenty after Easter. C. Schellhorn's last planted ones will be in fine; his early planting will be late. Azaleas, Ramblers and other blooming plants will be plentiful. Most of our local growers have realized nothing from their azaleas this season. For the last month fine plants could be bought at cost and the majority under cost.

The way Virginia violets are now coming in is more of a nuisance than a gain. Single dealers are getting as high as 50,000 to 75,000 per week and they bring hardly $1 per 1,000.

From the looks of some of our uptown dealers' places a person would think they were dry goods stores, from the way the windows are pasted up with paper signs and the plants almost completely covered with crepe paper, which really lessens the value of a fine plant.

The firm of Litzinger & Wade have dissolved partnership. All indebtedness will be assumed by Mr. Louis P. Litzinger, who will continue the business.

Mr. Charles L. Schmidt, of S. S. Pennock's, was over picking up some Easter orders.

Paul Berkowitz and Mr. Eschner, of Philadelphia, were among the callers.

F. H. Kramer.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The prize list for decorated vehicles and floats for the annual feast of flowers to be held May 8 has been issued, and it amounts to several thousand dollars.

CUT FLOWERS,

76 Wabash Ave. ....CHICAGO.

We shall have large supplies of Choice Stock for Easter, but demand promises to be heavier than ever before and we recommend early orders. We shall then be able to make shipment direct from the greenhouses, without rehandling, insuring the arrival of Lilies in the best of shape.

American Beauties. We have never had such good success with Beauties as we are having this year. We have 50,000 plants, all in fine crop, and can ship splendid stock of any length of stem.

Tea Roses. Bride, Bridesmaid, Liberty, Meteor, Perle and Golden Gate. 75,000 plants just coming into full crop. The plants are vigorous and the blooms right up to our usual high standard.

Fancy Carnations. It is well understood that we have the finest stock of Fancy Carnations in the country. 54,000 plants, all the newest and best sorts. Crop is on but there never is enough of such stock to go around.

Harrisii Lilies. Lilies are late this year and it is generally thought there will be a shortage, but we planted 10,000 bulbs, all selected Bermuda Harrisii, the best bulbs we could buy, and we think we can meet all demands. Send us your order.

Greens. We have the largest Asparagus house in the west, and two houses of Adiantum. Common Ferns are not keeping well and are scarce.

IN ADDITION TO THE ABOVE WE GROW AN IMMENSE STOCK OF VALLEY, TULIPS, VON SIONS and DUTCH HYACINTHS.

Buy Your Flowers Direct from the Grower and thereby get Better and Fresher Stock and Save the Rehandling Charges of the Middlemen.

[The frond is fruiting and what you have taken for insects are simply the cases containing the spores, through which ferns reproduce themselves.—Ed.]

"The Work of Civic Improvement" is the title of a very prettily illustrated and useful booklet issued by The Home Florist, of Springfield, O., under the auspices of the National League of Improvement Associations. It gives a very comprehensive review of the work of local improvement associations and the means employed to beautify cities and towns where these associations exist.

The Henry W. Gibbons Co., New York, have issued a neat pamphlet, entitled "How Roses Are Grown," and containing an extract from one of the bulletins of the American Rose Society.

From a daily paper we gather the remarkable information that "A new lily is shown this year, which is called the Harrasii and which is a more sturdy lily than the Bermuda, from which it is a descendant." It takes the average reporter to find interesting and accurate news.

A CAULIFLOWER COMBINE.

Cauliflower is a wholesome vegetable, but it requires careful handling to keep it at its best possibility. This is one reason a number of farmers on Long Island have just combined as a Cauliflower Growers' Association. Their plan is to issue 1,000 shares of stock of the par value of $5 each, the several shares each representing an acre of cauliflower. The association will have a manager to attend to the business of marketing cauliflower judiciously and profitably, and it is thought the farmers will find it a profitable arrangement. There has been too loose a conduct of the cauliflower industry, they believe, and it will be well to make the public comprehend how important it is that cauliflower should be served fresh, and at fair prices for good specimens.

A GARDENER KING.

In a German periodical appears an article upon the dynasty of the kings of Cambodia, in which is told the following tale of its origin: "In 1333, there was a gardener who became celebrated for the excellence of his cucumbers, so much so that the king, who had a great liking for this vegetable, ordered him to reserve the entire output for his own consumption. To make certain that none of the cucumbers were stolen, he instructed the gardener to have his garden watched night and day. One night, in order to see that his orders in the matter had been carried out, the king stole out into the garden by himself, was taken for a robber by the watchful gardener, and promptly killed. As he left no heir, there was great trouble about the succession, and a way out of the difficulty was found by making the gardener king. Since that time his descendants have sat on the throne of Cambodia."

Above shows my experience, care and selection of first-class bulbs.

I have an immense stock of the finest and choicest in the market, and in such quantities that exceed anything that I ever had and offered before. You would be astonished if you could take a look in seven (7) large greenhouses and an equal number of hotbeds which are filled to the fullest extent, and devoted to the entire cultivation of Easter plants alone. Therefore I will be prepared to fill all orders, if sent in time, as far as the supply will reach.

Azalea Indica. I am one of the largest importers of these choice Easter plants and have about a thousand more than last year. I raised these in large houses, 20x115 feet, erected for the cultivation solely of these plants. These azaleas were selected by myself last fall on my second trip to Belgium and as I am agent for a large concern there it gives you a chance to purchase your goods at first hand and not through a middleman. I have only new stock; none left over from a year ago. I can offer you plants in bloom, or buds, blooming Easter week, 6-in. pots, 50 cents up to $1.00 each. Most of them Mme. Vander Cruyssen, and some other of the best varieties which will be selected by myself. I have some fine specimen plants, 10-11-in. pots, 20-22 inches across, very large (Mme. Vander Cruyssen), of good shape and full of buds, $3.00 each, easily worth $5.00. Weight, with pots, 37 lbs.; weight without pots, 17 lbs.

Araucaria excelsa and glauca in excellent shape, 3 tiers, 5-in. pots, 60c, 75c and $1.00 each. Very fine specimens, $1.50 and $2.00 each, worth $3.00.

Spiraea compacta and floribunda. Fine bushy plants, my own importation; perfect jewels; 5½-6-in. pots, $3.00 per doz; Specimen plants, $4.00 per doz.

Hydrangea (Otaksa), 5-6-in. pots, $2.00 to $4.00 per doz.

Cineraria hybrida. Choice colors, 6-in. pots, $2.50, $3.00 and $4.00 per doz. In bloom now or at Easter. I have a house full of them.

Begonias. President Carnot and Semperflorens giganteum, also some other varieties, 6-in. pots, $3.00 to $4.00 per doz. Vernon and other good blooming varieties, 4-in. pots, $1.20 per doz.

Headquarters ...for... Easter Plants

BLOOMING EASTER WEEK.

Daisies (white) Marguerite. Fine bushy plants, 5-in. pots, $2.00 per doz.; 4-in., $1.00 per doz.

Liliums. Longiflorum and Harrisii. Fine plants, raised from bulbs 7x9, obtained of the well known firm of Henry F. Michell, 6-in. pots (from 5 to 10 buds to a plant), at the rate of 10c per bud. Height, 1½ to 2½ feet. No lilies sold by themselves; other plants must accompany them.

Cyperus (Umbrella plants), 4-in. pots, $1.00 per doz.

Corypha australis (Palms), fine plants, 14-18 in. high, 5-5½-in. pots, 50c each.

Dracena indivisa (imported), for decoration; 6-in. pots, 50c each.

Hyacinths (Dutch named), strictly my own importation, raised from bulbs that cost from $6.00 to $8.25 per 100. These fine hyacinths I am selling at the rate of $10.00 per 100; extra choice, $12.00.

Tournesol Tulips (double red and yellow striped), 3 in a 4-in. pot. They are simply beautiful and sell at sight. $1.50 per doz. pots.

Daffodils (Von Sion), double nose, 3 in a 5-in. pot, from $1.50 to $1.75 per doz. pots.

Geraniums, 3-in. pots, Mme. Thibaut, Pilot, and some other good varieties, $5.00 per 100.

Cash with order, please. Money can be sent safe by express, postal money order, registered letter or drafts on Philadelphia or New York banks. At such a busy time (packing and shipping) I have no time to inquire into recommendation letters. All goods shipped at purchaser's risk.

State if plants are to be emptied out of pots to save express charges or not.

Mr. G. Aschmann has very fine healthy Azaleas, Hydrangeas Easter Lilies, Spiraeas, Tulips, Hyacinths and other plants in bloom and bud. We can very highly recommend our customers to Mr. Aschmann for fair, reliable business treatment.

Novelties and Specialties

Campanula Isophylla Mayii.

In this new Bell-Flower we have one of the most important and valuable novelties of the season, and a plant that with only ordinary care can be grown by anyone; a plant for everybody. It succeeds best as a pot plant grown in a half shady situation, and may either be permitted to trail over the sides of the pot or staked and grown upright; under either condition it becomes one mass of flowers of a pleasing light blue color, and are produced continuously through the summer. Strong stock plants in 3-inch pots, 60 cents each; $5.00 per dozen. Good young plants in 2-inch pots, 25 cents each; $2.50 per dozen.

Deutzia Gracilis Rosea (new).

Identical with Gracilis in general habit, but with flowers fully double the size of that graceful variety, to which is added the additional charm of being suffused with a delicate rosy tint, just sufficient to relieve the dead white which is objectionable in the type, and which will undoubtedly place it in the front rank of shrubs for winter forcing. A limited lot of one-year-old plants. $2.00 per dozen; $15.00 per 100.

Anemone Japonica Queen Charlotte.

The finest of all the Anemones and a grand summer and fall cut flower. Strong 2¼-inch pots, 75 cents per dozen; $6.00 per 100.

Campanula Isophylla Mayii.

Polygonum Baldschuanicum.

A hardy climber of recent introduction from the mountains of Turkestan. It is of very rapid growth, frequently growing from 10 to 12 feet high in one season. The stems are twining and cling for support to any object within reach. Every branchlet terminates in a panicle of white flowers, which are produced in the greatest profusion from July to September. A plant that is certain to meet with popular favor. Strong plants, 75 cents each.

Tuberous Begonia, "Duke Zeppelin."

A most useful and attractive variety that should soon become a favorite for bedding, possessing the great advantage over other tuberous-rooted Begonias of delighting in full sunshine. It is of dwarf habit, growing from 6 to 8 inches high, throwing up well above the foliage numberless stems bearing full, double dazzling scarlet flowers, giving the whole plant a brightness, grace and elegance difficult to describe. Strong bulbs, 20 cents each; $2.00 per dozen; $15.00 per 100.

Frilled Tuberous-Rooted Begonia.

A most unique form, with very large single flowers which are entirely distinct from anything heretofore offered, the petals being wavy and beautifully frilled on the edges, similar to the newer forms of Petunias. A decided acquisition. Strong bulbs, 25 cents each; $2.50 per dozen.
